FREE VOTING BY MINISTERS RAISES FUROR

Politicians and Press Divided on Wisdom of Move of British Cabinet

BALDWIN APPEALED FOR UNITED FRONT

By NEOLEY FARSON

LONDON, Jan. 23 (CDN).—The common-sense decision of the British Cabinet yesterday, avoiding an immediate crisis in the National Government and permitting the Cabinet's tariff battle to be decided by a free vote of the House of Commons, with the Cabinet ministers free to vote for or against the proposed measures, has raised a tempest in a teapot in today's British press.

The press, with the exception of the semi-official opinion of The London Times, either is lukewarm or is considerably worked into academic indignation over what it declares the unorthodox and unwarrantable departure from Parliamentary procedure. Public opinion, as a whole, is split distinctly in two schools of thought. The first school contends that the decision allowing the dissentient ministers to speak against the Government's own Tariff Bill on the floor of the House is the modus vivendi of a great stroke of statesmanship; the other school denounces it as contemptible, unworkable.

CHAMBERLAIN'S VIEWS

For the moment the wisest analysis of the amazing Cabinet decision appears to be summed up by Sir Austen Chamberlain:

"I should have thought it a calamity, not merely for ourselves but for the whole world, if the national unity as wide and as great as you can ever hope to have in political affairs, represented by this present Government, had been broken at this hour. I am thankful the Cabinet have come to this decision, since they cannot reach unanimity on certain questions, that they should revert to the old custom, practised a hundred years ago, of allowing the members to vote and speak freely on an issue without any sacrifice to the common measure and the great national unity we have attained."

FINE TEAMWORK

The realities of the case are that political teamwork of the highest order is being called for, for Great Britain to present a solid national front facing the present and the

PENSION FUND UNDER REVIEW

Government Will Seek Actuarial Advice on Superannuation Tables

Actuarial study of civic participation in the British Columbia system of superannuation benefits will be undertaken at the request of the Government immediately, following receipt of a number of applications for some variation of the present terms of the scheme, it was announced yesterday by Hon. J. W. Jones.

Restoration of employees under the superannuation plan who are retired from public service for varying periods and subsequently taken back, is one point brought under review, arising out of Provincial curtailment of staffs, in cases where in future years these men may be reinstated when their services are once more required.

COMPULSORY RETIREMENT

Another point was broached yesterday by a delegation from the Vancouver City Council. Aldermen Lembke and Miller and Deputy Comptroller Wardhaugh, of the reorganization committee of the Vancouver Corporation, called on Mr. Jones for a discussion of a proposal being considered by the Mainland body of automatic retirements in certain branches of the civic service, on a fixed basis.

That there may be some immediate objection to this plan was forecast in a statement issued by the Minister of Finance after the conference. The statement read:

"The discussion centred around the proposal of the reorganization committee of Vancouver City to automatically retire employees of the city at a fixed age, and the possible effect on the superannuation fund if compulsory retirement were approved by that council.

"It was thought that compulsory

PRESIDENT SIGNS CREDIT MEASURE

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23 (AP).—President Hoover took another step today in his economic programme to the aid of business. He signed the Federal Land Bank Bill, which adds $125,000,000 to the capital of the land banks and is designed to ease the strain upon mortgage-burdened farmers.

The President has before him many names from which to choose with three directors yet to be appointed. Under the measure, these are to be Democrats, and he conferred last night with Congressional Democratic leaders.

H.M.C.S. Skeena and Vancouver Rushed to Scene of Revolution

Esquimalt Warships Ordered to Protect Foreigners in Salvadorean Uprising

FIRST UNDERTAKING BY CANADIAN NAVY

H.M.C.S. Skeena and H.M.C.S. Vancouver have been rushed to Acajutla, seaport of the Central American republic of El Salvador, where a revolution is in progress. The two ships from Esquimalt were on their way to Panama and on to the West Indies to take part in manoeuvres with the British squadron. An appeal by foreign consuls for the protection of war vessels to assure the safety of foreign residents led to the diversion of the Skeena and Vancouver to Acajutla. A British cruiser is also hastening to the Salvadorean coast, as are several United States warships.

According to information received from Salvador there has been severe fighting in the vicinity of Acajulta and already a number of refugees have been taken on board H.M.C.S. Skeena. It is considered likely that the Canadian cruisers will be held in Salvadorean waters for some time.

FIRST INTERVENTION

This is the first time that Canadian war vessels have taken part in the protection of foreign residents in Central or South American uprisings. The arrival of the trim Canadian destroyers at Acajutla, near the scene of the uprising, has been described in dispatches as "most timely and welcome."

H.M.C.S. Skeena, Commander V. G. Brodeur, and H.M.C.S. Vancouver, Lieutenant-Commander F. G. Hart, sailed from Esquimalt on January 5 for the West Indies. The ships called in at San Diego, Cal., on January 9, and left that port four days later. Last Sunday they arrived at Manzanillo, Mexico, for a two days' stay, and were on their way to Panama when they received orders to make for Acatjutla under full steam.

RED UPRISING

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23 (AP).—With foreign lives endangered by Communistic uprisings, three American war vessels were ordered tonight to steam under full speed to the tiny Central American republic of El Salvador. Two Canadian destroyers already had changed their course and put into the Salvadorean port of Acajutla, and the British Embassy advised the State Department that one of its cruisers soon would be on the scene.

Spurred by a formal demand from the Italian Consul-General for protection of his countrymen, the Navy Department ordered the cruiser Rochester and two destroyers—the Phillips and the Wicks—from Panama to Salvador.

The Rochester, flagship of the Resignation of Drummond Rumor

LONDON, Jan. 24 (AP).—A Reuter's News Agency dispatch from Geneva said it was rumored there today that Sir Eric Drummond intended to inform the League of Nations Council Monday that he would resign as Secretary-General of the league within a year.

The rumors lacked confirmation.

Truck Driver's Errand of Mercy Save's Patient's Life

OVER the Island highways that link this city with Nanaimo, William Waine, newspaper truck driver, sped on an errand of mercy during the early hours of yesterday morning and last night had the satisfaction of learning his dash through the night had resulted in the saving of a life.

Shortly before 2 a.m., Dr. A. B. Manson, of Nanaimo, telephoned to Harold Davenport, local pharmacist, asking that a certain anaesthetic, not obtainable in Nanaimo, be rushed to the General Hospital there.

Dr. Manson's patient, a man eighty years of age, was suffering from a serious ailment which was aggravated by complications. His age precluded the use of ordinary anaesthetic, so the doctor arranged to have a supply of nupercaine, or spinal anaesthetic, dispatched to Nanaimo by The Colonist newspaper truck, which was the only transportation available at that time.

Impressed with the urgency of the case, Mail Clerk Andrew Veitch delayed the truck until Mr. Davenport could obtain the nupercaine.

Leaving here at 3:05 a.m., Driver Waine made the trip to Nanaimo in three hours and ten minutes, dropping his bundles of papers at the various stations en route, but keeping well ahead of schedule.

It was imperative that the anaesthetic reach the Nanaimo General Hospital by 7 a.m., and with this in mind Mr. Waine drove direct to the hospital and delivered his package.

Last night the physician reported the operation had been a success, that there was no reaction and that his patient was well on the way to recovery.

UNTOUCHABLES GO ON STRIKE

Textile Workers Protest Arrest of Their Secretary—Seventy-Six Mills Idle

BOMBAY, Jan. 23 (AP).—Seventy thousand "untouchables," members of a textile workers' union at Ahmedabad organized and headed by Mahatma Gandhi, went on strike today in protest against the arrest of their secretary under the emergen y ordinances forbidding Nationalist activity.

In Bombay the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce decided to have nothing to do with the Round-Table Conference committees appointed by Prime Minister Ramsay Macdonald, which will meet next week at New Delhi to continue the work of preparing a constitution for India.

The publication of statistics showed that this week's gold shipments from India were 60 per cent below last week's. The total was 13,000,000 rupees (approximately $3,400,000), against 36,000,000 rupees (approximately $9,400,000).

The Ahmedabad strike paralyzed seventy-six textile mills and resulted in the calling out of the entire police force to patrol the mill area. An attempt to burn the police station was frustrated. The district magistrate banned all processions and meetings.

MONTREAL FOG HALTS STREET CAR SERVICE

MONTREAL, Jan. 23.—A fog of the "pea soup" variety enveloped Montreal late last night and early this morning. So thick was the blanket of fog that the street car service was stopped on several lines. Policemen were removed from their posts for fear of being hit by slow moving automobiles.

Mississippi Flood Threat Still Serious

GLENDORA, Miss., Jan. 23 (AP).—Flood waters of the Tallahatchie Valley, in Mississippi, today renewed their threats in Humphreys and Yazoo Counties. In Northern Louisiana additional rains kept the principal rivers in flood stage.

Levees held in the Tallahatchie River Valley of the Mississippi Delta. Below, on the Yazoo, terrific strain from high waters caused city officials of Belzoni to send out an emergency call for sacks to sandbag the weakened dykes.

Freezing weather was forecast for tonight and tomorrow with no more rain predicted until next week. While this weather would inconvenience thousands in refugee camps, it would aid the levee fights.

PREMIERS WILL MEET SOMETIME IN WEEK TO DISCUSS REPARATIONS

PARIS, Jan. 23 (AP). — Premier Pierre Laval said today he expected to meet Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain for a talk on reparations within a week.

Before he left he said he had been in communication with Mr. MacDonald and expected the date and place of their conversations to be decided on Monday. He asked Mr. MacDonald to come to Paris, but was willing to accept some other meeting place.

BURGLARS' BIG SCORE

WINNIPEG, Jan. 23 (CP).—Winnipeg's "Marathon" burglars today ran their score up to sixty-seven by pleading guilty to additional thefts. Police expect them to turn in over a "century" before they appear Monday for sentence.

STRIKERS IN SPAIN START NEW TROUBLE

Extremists Cripple Activity in Barcelona—Authorities Hope to End Disorder

NAVAL CRAFT RIDING AT ANCHOR IN HARBOR

BARCELONA, Spain, Jan. 23 (AP).—Extremist workers today put on a prelude to the nation-wide general strike called for next Monday and succeeded in crippling activities of all sorts in Barcelona.

Trolley cars were halted and the streets were almost deserted except for soldiers and police early in the day, but, later on, many stores, cafes and offices were opened and the authorities said they soon would succeed in ending the trouble.

Military reinforcements were unable to unload supplies because dockworkers refused to lift a hand.

MANY PLANTS CLOSED

Numerous smaller factories operated, but almost all large industrial plants were shut tight.

The strike was called last night at a secret meeting of the "revolutionary committee." Leaders declared it to be a prelude to a nation-wide movement next week aimed at establishing a republic of Soviet character.

Three destroyers and several other naval craft rode at anchor in the harbor.

MANRESA IS QUIET

Manresa, scene of serious fighting earlier in the week, was reported quiet today. Two bombs exploded there this morning, causing little damage.

Col. Francisco Maccia, head of the Catalonia State Government, sent a formal note to Madrid in which he declared his loyalty to the National Government and denied reports he was connected with a plot to form a Communistic Catalonian republic.

This note was made public after Mayor Ayguade, of Barcelona, had declared Colonel Maccia was chiefly responsible for the strike and had said that if the colonel "would spend more time governing Catalonia he would solve those labor troubles."

MADRID, Jan. 23 (AP).—Precautionary measures were taken throughout Spain today to prevent disorders in connection with the general strike, scheduled to begin Monday and aimed at the establishment of a proletarian dictatorship. Communists, anarchists and syndicalists have covered all Spain

NEW BRIDGE AT JORDAN RIVER

Engineers of Department of Works Make Fast Time on Structure

Construction of a permanent timber bridge, 128 feet long and with an eighteen-foot clear roadway to stand fifteen-ton loads, in the fast time of eight working days, was the record made by engineers of the Department of Public Works on the replacement of the bridge washed out at Sandstone Creek, Jordan River, and which will be opened to the public today. Such a bridge normally would take a month to assemble and construct.

The work was carried out under the supervision of H. L. Swan, engineer in charge of the Vancouver Island district, who co-ordinated the efforts of the draughting, purchasing, engineering and other departments to make the result possible. He was assisted on the ground by W. W. Bell, assistant engineer in the Esquimalt district, and by an average crew of twelve men under R. Ellison, W. Wishart and Joseph Porrier, foremen in charge of various phases of construction.

BRIDGE WASHED OUT

The work was done by day labor by the Department of Public Works staff, and with the assistance of bridge workers drawn from Sooke and Esquimalt areas. The result is a fine permanent traffic bridge over the troublesome stream which roared into angry flood on January 11 last and demolished the original traffic bridge, besides stripping a logging railway bridge of all its supports.

The log of the new Sandstone Creek bridge makes bridge history in its own way. The old bridge carried away on the night of January 10-11, the department being notified

LOGGER INJURED AT GOLDSTREAM

Andrew Lindgard Is Crushed Beneath Six-Foot Log at Lumber Camp—Condition Grave

Andrew Lindgard, chokerman for Fairservice Gilerin Timber Company, at the Goldstream logging camp, yesterday suffered serious injuries in an accident, and last night was reported in a grave condition at the Jubilee Hospital, where he was taken in the C. & C. ambulance.

Mr. Lindgard, according to the report, was working under a spar-tree when a six-foot log fell on top of him, crushing his thigh and fracturing the pelvis bone. One of his ankles also was broken.

JAPANESE MAKE DISPLAY OF MILITARY FORCE AT SHANGHAI

Eleven Warships Anchored in Whangpoo—1,000 Men Reported Landed at Shanghai With Field Artillery and Machine Guns—Occupation of Chinese Establishments Threatened

Civil Authorities Making Efforts to Keep Order

LONDON, Jan. 23 (AP).—An Exchange Telegraph Agency dispatch said 1,000 men with field artillery and machine guns were landed at Shanghai today from Japanese warships. The Japanese were part of forces aboard six ships, including a cruiser, an aircraft carrier and four destroyers. The situation at Shanghai was described as tense. Municipal police were in control.

MORE SHIPS ARRIVE

SHANGHAI, Jan. 23 (AP).—Five more Japanese ships of war dropped anchor in the Whangpoo River today, ready for action in case more trouble develops between the Chinese and Japanese populations of Shanghai.

The newcomers brought to eleven the total of Japan's warcraft ordered to duty here because of the tense situation resulting from a series of street fights between Chinese and Japanese and from controversies in connection with the boycott on Japanese goods.

ULTIMATUM UNANSWERED

The Japanese ultimatum to the Chinese authorities demanding abolishment of local anti-Japanese societies remained unanswered, the mayor having explained that he must refer it to the Government at Nanking.

Japanese officials declared that unless their demands were met, their armed forces probably would undertake occupation of strategic positions within the Chinese portion of Shanghai outside the international settlement.

EFFORTS FOR ORDER

Naval officials said marines would be landed as soon as quarters for them had been prepared. Chinese municipal officials and Japan consular authorities said every effort was being made to preserve order. Two thousand Japanese residents decided after a meeting that the Japanese colony should attempt to prevent untoward incidents and

MAKE WAR ON MOB OF DUCKS

Farmers Literally in Arms in California for Protection of Crops

BRAWLEY, Cal., Jan. 23 (AP).—A mild uprising of Northern Imperial Valley ranchers against hungry wild ducks flared into an open armed rebellion yesterday as an invading horde of 40,000 migratory birds from the Salton Sea attacked barley and vegetable fields with unstinted appetites.

Charges of lack of protection for farmers were hurled at State and Federal Governments. A mayor, who owns extensive vegetable fields offered to furnish shells for all hunters and pay their fines if game wardens arrested them.

A shotgun barrage, which echoed through the desert empire, blazed out as embattled ranchers stalked into their fields to drive out, by slaughter if necessary, wild ducks. Weapons of all varieties constituted the arms that replaced the ploughs.

Drowned in Trying to Rescue Dog

OSHAWA, Ont., Jan. 23 (CP).—Jack Bennett, Bowmanville, loved his dog better than life. Today the canine chum fell through the ice on Vanstone pond and disappeared under the ice. Without a moment's hesitation the boy plunged into the pond and died trying to save the dog. His body was recovered shortly afterward. The dog was rescued by people who rushed to the scene.

TORONTO, Jan. 23.—A copyrighted photograph of the Prince of Wales in the basis of an action which commenced in Osgoode Hall today, George Freeland, Toronto photographer, is suing the Canadian Bank Note Company, Ottawa, for $50,000. He claims the Bank Note Company used a copyrighted photograph of His Royal Highness on an issue of Dominion of Canada two-dollar bills.

NEW MYSTERY IN HONOLULU

Strange Halt in Murder Probe Suggests Freedom for Accused

HONOLULU, Jan. 23 (AP). — A mysterious halt in grand jury proceedings against four persons accused of lynching an alleged woman attacker overshadowed developments today in the movement to clean up Hawaii.

The city buzzed with varying reports, among them being one that the grand jury had voted not to indict Mrs. Granville Fortescue, Lieut. Thomas H. Massie and two navy enlisted men for the killing of Joseph Kahahawai, suspected assaulter of Mrs. Massie.

OFFICIALS ARE SILENT

All officials were silent on the subject. Attorneys pointed out that a presiding judge had the right to reject the findings of a grand jury. This gave rise to a report that the grand jury had voted a "no bill," and presiding Judge A. M. Cristy had refused to accept it.

Meanwhile municipal officials completed arrangements to turn over the Honolulu police department to the newly-appointed police commission created by the swift action of the Territorial Legislature.

DISMISSAL MOTION

A motion for dismissal of the police court murder charge against Mrs. Fortescue, Massie and the two enlisted men, E. J. Lord and Albert O. Jones, will confront City and County Attorney James F. Gilliland Monday.

NEW CRACKS IN VATICAN PALACE

Further Collapse of Ancient Buildings Feared as Engineers Test Masonry

VATICAN CITY, Jan. 23 (AP).—New cracks appeared today in the Vatican Palace close to the wing of the library which collapsed several weeks ago. All the valuable contents of the endangered portion have been removed.

Thin strips of glass cemented over the old cracks were broken, and engineers feared that the ancient wall was in danger.

Two cracks, each seven feet long, opened across the arched ceiling of a ground floor room where part of the library catalogue is kept. It was shored up.

The building is 400 years old, and for mainy years there have been hairline cracks to which nobody paid any attention. After the collapse of the wing recently, engineers placed test stripe of glass over the small cracks to determine if there was any tendency to spread. Yesterday the glass over two cracks broke, giving warning that the old masonry was settling.

Everything was carried out and only emergency workmen are now allowed in the danger zone.

Ancient Jesuit Order in Spain Dissolved by Law

State Will Confiscate Church Property in Ten Days —Priests and Members Ordered to Disband Under Decree—Jesuits Will Comply

MADRID, Jan. 23 (AP).—A decree dissolving the Jesuit Order in Spain, where it was founded nearly 400 years ago, and confiscating its property in the name of the state was officially announced tonight.

The decree, which would become effective with its official publication, probably tomorrow, calls for the disbanding of Jesuit chapters within ten days.

Inventories of their property, estimated to b worth $30,000,000, are to be filed with the Government within the same period. Commissioners to take over the Jesuit possessions and administer them on behalf of the state would be appointed five days earlier.

Under the decree, all Jesuit property will be taken over by the state and dedicated to public uses.

Alvaro Albornes, Minister of Justice, said the decree probably would be published tomorrow.

It provides that the Society of Jesus, as a dependent organization within Spain, is to be dissolved. Priests and members of the organization are given ten days in which to cease living together in communities.

Civil governors of the Spanish provinces are required to see that the law is complied with, and that members of the organization do not reassemble.

The Jesuits are forbidden to sell or dispose of their property. The provincial governors are required within five days to furnish Premier Manuel Azana with lists of members of the organization and of its possessions.

High Jesuit spokesmen said they would comply with the decree, although they considered it unjust. Superiors of the order have instructions to submit to the decree, it was authoritatively said, as providing for dissolution, but not expulsion.

IMMIGRATION IS SELECTIVE

Only Those Settlers Who Can Establish Themselves Are Being Admitted

Canada has found a stable basis for new settlement, and is insisting on the right to eliminate from immigration to this land those who could not support themselves from the outset, it was indicated by W. M. Jones, Commissioner of Colonization, who paid a brief visit to the city yesterday from Ottawa. Self-reliance, guided by impartial advice, has effected permanent settlement of thousands of families on a self-supporting basis in the past eighteen months, he stated.

Under the policy of immigration and colonization set by the Dominion Government, restrictive only in the sense that those without sufficient means to establish and maintain themselves in Canada are not encouraged to come, the influx of immigrants has fallen off from 163,000 for the fiscal year 1929, to 20,920 entering up to November in the current fiscal period.

In respect to immigration in 1931, 83 per cent of the incoming people have been members of families already located in Canada and established on the land. New settlement was confined to 4,000 entrants, all of whom met the requirements of the department and will be able to establish themselves without assistance.

SELECTIVE POLICY

Intending settlers today must satisfy the department that they will not become a public charge, and that they have means of maintaining themselves until established. They must also assure the department that they are not entering to compete in the labor market with those already in the country. The bulk of the actual settlement, therefore, has been in placing those already in Canada satisfactorily on the land. To this end, advice and practical help have been given, but no financial outlay has been re-

Tremendous Drive For Empire Trade Sweeping Britain

Inaugurated by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, "Buy British" Slogan Spreads Throughout British Isles, Firing Imagination of People

OF considerable interest in the light of the coming Imperial Economic Conference and the definite swing of all British countries to Empire trade, a progress report by the Empire Market Board, just received in this city, shows the extent of an enterprising campaign carried on in the United Kingdom under the slogan of "Buy British." The campaign was launched by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales on November 16, and has taken an imaginative hold on the people. The following facts were gleaned from a report received by the markets branch, Department of Agriculture, yesterday:

The aim of the campaign is set out as an appeal to the public to "buy first the produce of the home country, and next the produce of the Empire overseas," and "as part of a comprehensive plan to develop the economic resources of the Commonwealth."

JOINT PUBLICITY DRIVE

From one end of Britain to the other, commercial organizations, boards of trade, civic and other corporations, and public and semi-public groups joined in an intensive advertising campaign. This was carried on by placards at each railway station, on tramcars, railway coaches, bill hoardings and everywhere that would meet the public eye. In the press of the country, thousands of columns of space and advertising carried the appeal. No paid space was taken by the Empire Market Board, but an aggregate of hundreds of thousands of inches was donated through private agencies.

More than eighty national trade associations and 800 local associations in the British Isles co-operated in the drive. These included the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, the Federation of British Industries, the National Union of Manufacturers, the National Chamber of Trade, besides grocers' associations, retail distributors and many others.

"BUY BRITISH" APPEAL

The poster display alone was the largest the country every witnessed, it is set out. More than 4,000,000 copies of two leading designs accepted by the board from prominent artists were shown throughout the country. Under the slogan "Buy British," they reached from the largest centre of population to the smallest hamlet in the country. Small posters were carried on 200,000 automobiles, through the co-operation of the Automobile Association and the Royal Automobile Club. The posters were displayed in addition in shop windows, in postoffices, at auto club patrol boxes on every highway, banks, theatres, and all Government offices and departments.

A "Buy British" airplane went from London to Tokio with success. Tubes, trams and buses carried the same appeal to millions of people daily.

Children in 25,000 schools in the British Isles read the appeal in special displays of posters in these institutions. By pictures and description the slogan of the campaign and its special appeal was carried in the newspapers of the country to millions of subscribers, at home and afield.

PRINCE OPENS DRIVE

On the air, the British Broadcasting Corporation gave a half-hour programme daily, inaugurated by the Prince of Wales in person, and continued by leading statesmen and business leaders. Film news reels gave full play to the drive, picturing prominent men in action in support of the campaign, and the actual movement of British goods in all parts of the Empire and under all climes.

On each package of mail, to an extent of 17,000,000 pieces, "Buy British" stamps were sent afield, and many firms adopted private stamps in addition to use in this way.

Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, and other British countries having trade agencies in England, joined fully in the drive, making special displays at their London quarters, and participating to the fullest possible extent to further the campaign.

The "Buy British" campaign was designed to last for two months, but the idea has taken such a hold on the country that its great driving force is still carrying it forward far beyond the original expectations. The campaign was practically without cost to the Empire Market Board, donated by hundreds of different agencies out of their own budgets. It is classed "as the greatest advertising display ever put on in the British Isles," surpassing even the national appeal in wartime for men and funds.

The Japanese consular police arrested seven Japanese charged with participating in the recent riot which resulted in two deaths. Chinese officials announced that their nationals who took part in the disturbance also were being sought.

CONSUL'S DENIAL

Edwin S. Cunningham, United States Consul-General, denied he had issued a warning to the Japanese against independent action against Chinese within the international settlement.

THREAT OF OCCUPATION

TOKIO, Jan. 23 (AP).—Japan threatened today to occupy every Chinese barracks, fortress and military establishment in the Shanghai district unless the Chinese authorities put a halt to anti-Japanese demonstrations.

The Foreign Office and the Naval Department worked hand in hand to enforce the Government's demands, which include the disbanding of anti-Japanese organizations held largely responsible for the boycott of Japanese goods and the recent disorders.

These organizations, the Tokio authorities declared, have been at the bottom of numerous provocative measures, and the Chinese Government never has attempted to stay them.

Additional warships arrived at Shanghai late today, providing a total landing force of about 1,700 to be used to protect Japanese residents in case of emergency, it was announced.

special service division stationed at Panama, carries Rear-Admiral Arthur St. C. Smith and Commander L. P. Treadwell. It will take about forty-eight hours to run to Salvador, while the two destroyers will make the trip in twenty-four hours.

The first information of the serious disturbances came to the State Department late today from William J. McCafferty, Charge d'Affaires at San Salvador, the capital.

HEAVY FIGHTING

He advised that Communists were attacking the city of Sonsonati, and that there was fighting in at least two other towns within a few miles of the capital.

Telephone communication had been cut off, the railway near Sonsonati had been torn up, and disorders were general in the cities, he reported.

He added the authorities were taking energetic measures to suppress the disturbances.

The State Department was in communication with both the British Embassy and the Canadian Legation on the situation. It said it was informed the Italian Consul-General, the British Charge d'Affaires and McCafferty felt the presence of the war vessels on the Salvadorean coast would have a beneficial moral effect and perhaps prevent much bloodshed.

High official circles described the prompt British and Canadian action tonight as "most welcome," even though foreign battleships entering into Latin-American troubles is usual.

It was the first time officials could recall of Canada taking so active a part in Latin-American matters. Its destroyers were en route from the west coast of Canada to the Atlantic when the situation developed.

Great Britain once before sent a war vessel to Central America. The British had asked the United States to protect its interest in a sudden outbreak in Nicaragua.

Before an American ship could be sent, however, a British ship was dispatched to the scene. It withdrew as soon as United States vessels arrived. The present Salvoradean Government, which has been beset with Communistic troubles, is not recognized by the United States or other Central American Governments.

RECENT REVOLUTION

Led by General Martinez, the present head of the Government, a group of young military officers recently overthrew President Araujo and forced him to leave the country. Jefferson Caffery, Minister to Colombia, and another State Department official were sent by Secretary Stimson to determine whether the circumstances surrounding the coup d'etat prevented Martinez from becoming a legal successor to the Araujo Government.

Caffery recommended since Martinez had been a cabinet member of the preceding Government he should not be recognized, and Secretary Stimson has accordingly withheld approval.

SCHOOLS NEAR TACOMA DESTROYED BY FIRE

TACOMA, Wash., Jan. 23 (AP).—Fire of undetermined origin completely destroyed both the old and new grade schools and the new gymnasium at Yelm, twenty-eight miles south of here, this morning. Fire companies from Yelm, Roy and Olympia aided in fighting the spread of the flames. The loss is estimated as in excess of $50,000.

Pile Sufferers

Can You Answer These Questions?

Do you know why external remedies do not give quick and permanent relief?

Why cutting does not remove the cause?

Do you know the cause of Piles is internal?

That there is congestion of blood in the lower bowel—the veins flabby, the parts almost dead?

Do you know that there is a harmless internal remedy for itching, bleeding or protruding piles discovered by Dr. Leonhardt and known as HEM-ROID, that is guaranteed?

HEM-ROID banishes piles by removing the cause. It stimulates the circulation in the lower bowel—drives out the thick impure blood, heals and restores the affected parts.

Dr. Leonhardt's HEM-ROID has an almost unbelievable record of success right in this city. So why waste time on external remedies or worry about an operation when MacFarlane and Vancouver Dr. Stores invites every Pile sufferer to try HEM-ROID with guarantee of money-back if it does not rid their Piles no matter how stubborn the case (Advt.)

Alberta to Close Office in London

EDMONTON, Jan. 23 (CP).—The office of the Alberta Agent-General in London, England, will be closed as an economy measure, it is learned here today.

The office was opened in 1913, and Hon. Herbert Greenfield, former Alberta Premier, was in charge for four years, retiring in March, 1931. Hugh M. Baker, Mr. Greenfield's secretary, has been in charge of the office since.

It is estimated here that elimination of the office will save the Alberta Government approximately $20,000 annually.

impending world's crises, and there is every reason to believe that this co-operation will come forth.

Ramsay MacDonald remained silently in office, although the strong hand now being applied to India is a considerable reversion of his policy. Yesterday, it is said, it was Stanley Baldwin, Conservative leader, himself who suggested and was the strongest pleader supporting Mr. MacDonald for the Cabinet compromise to preserve the facade of National Government.

LOW TARIFF PROPOSED

The proposed tariff plan, which will be brought forward in legislative form soon after February 2, calls for about a 10 per cent tariff on all manufactured goods with very limited exceptions. This is to be imposed as soon as the necessary legislation can be passed. A selection is also to be made from goods covered by this low tariff, with the view of an imposition on them of a higher tariff designed to greatly reduce imports.

The first section is estimated to supply a revenue of some £30,000,000 ($103,200,000) yearly, from the outcome of which, it is hoped, some relief will be made to the Englishman from his oppressive income tax. The second hope is to correct the expected unfavorable trade balance of some £50,000,000 ($172,000,000).

at 10 a.m., on January 11. A foot bridge was ordered immediately, to get supplies in to 100 people isolated at Jordan River.

The foot bridge was in use within twenty-four hours of the start of construction. Plans for the permanent traffic bridge were ready in a like period, and the work of ordering materials and assembling timber, piling and other supplies on the ground commenced. A Victoria foundry co-operated by getting out angle irons in double quick time, while piling and lumber were rushed in record time to the scene. By Friday the material was on the ground, and on Saturday, January 16, construction commenced.

OPEN TO TRAFFIC

Working two shifts daily, the crew assembled the piling equipment, installed a local lighting plant, and in well under eight days had the new bridge ready for decking. Decking will be in place by this morning, and the completed bridge will be open to traffic.

Mr. Swan declined credit for the achievement, saying it was co-ordination and teamwork between many departments, and the active interest of the men themselves that made the feat possible. The record, however, has set a pace that will stand for some time for permanent construction capable of taking heavy loads.

IMMIGRATION IS SELECTIVE

quired in respect to such settlement.

Contrasting with this is the position a few years ago when, under a former Dominion Government, Canada maintained fifteen immigration offices in United States cities to encourage indiscriminate immigration, without any restrictive limitations. The cost of these offices alone was $264,000 yearly, Mr. Jones stated. Immigration is welcomed by the department today, provided that intending settlers can maintain themselves and will not compete with lessened opportunities in the labor market. There is, however, the further desire that settlement be based on tenure of productive land, where such settlement will be self-supporting and without drain on the public purse.

MANY FAMILIES PLACED

On its active side in assisting those already in Canada to establish themselves on the land, the department has placed 6,020 families, acting in conjunction with the settlement branches of both Canadian railways. In addition, farm employment was secured for 12,682 single men. This work was carried on jointly with the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National Railways, and was distinct from analogous measures taken by the several provinces.

By inspections of land, advice as to stock and equipment and practical hints to enable new settlers to establish themselves, the department has directly assisted in thousands of cases of permanent settlement this year, it was made plain.

LAND TENURE

Encouragement of land tenure was also recommended to the provinces and to municipalities on a similar basis for the partial relief of a situation where men in cities were congregating without early hope of employment. Mixed farming, with livestock as a basis, is being recommended in this connection, and on a personal enterprise basis, and not by means of cash outlays as in settlement schemes popular a few years ago.

Maintenance of the new policy, it is shown, has contributed something of permanent and lasting value to Canada, and at the same time costs of immigration and colonization control federally have been reduced by 37 per cent in the past eighteen months, under the policies outlined by Hon. W. A. Gordon, Minister of Colonization.

BUREAU MAY BE CHANGED

Police Commissioner McGavin Seeks Centralization of Criminal Records

Centralization of the city criminal identification bureau, of which Detective T. Harvey Bamford is head, is advocated by Police Commissioner Andrew McGavin, who will propose the transference of the present files to a separate department where the recording of fingerprints will be combined with the photographing of criminals.

The move is advocated by Commissioner McGavin as an economy measure and one which will tend to place the detection of crime and the ultimate apprehension of criminals on an even more efficient basis than in the past.

PURCHASE CAMERA

The proposal is to purchase a camera for the use of the identification bureau. This camera will be used in photographing those sentenced to prison for criminal offences, and will materially lower the cost of the work, which in the past has been done by an outside man, Commissioner McGavin said.

Detective Bamford, who has been in charge of the identification bureau for the past ten years, has been specially trained in photographic work and will have full charge of the department, which has been largely built up since he joined the force.

NEW QUARTERS

Above the garage, where the patrol and prowler cars are housed, is ample accommodation for the identification bureau and the photographic department. There is a dark room, fully equipped, and a room for the many cabinets, which contain approximately 68,590 fingerprint cards and photographs.

The addition of fingerprint cards and photographs to the present records average 2,400 annually, exclusive of the hundreds of circulars received from various police departments all over the world.

During the past few years the existing accommodation for these records has been rapidly diminishing until it has become necessary to extend the bureau to newer quarters.

GREATER EFFICIENCY

It is because of the need of more space and because in the centralizing of identification work greater efficiency can be obtained that Commissioner McGavin will propose the transference of the bureau from its present quarters in the detective office to the rooms above the garage.

Some idea of the growth of the identification bureau is given in a comparison of the records as they exist today with those ten years ago when Detective Bamford took over the supervision of this department.

Ten years ago the city police had at their disposal records of criminals which were all filed away in two cabinets containing sixteen drawers. Today forty-four drawers are needed to hold all the fingerprint cards.

INCREASE SHOWN

The index system to the records of criminals has increased to such an extent that whereas a cabinet of four drawers was all that was needed ten years ago, a steel cabinet containing thirty-three drawers is now in use.

In addition to these records, there are 4,500 cards indexing the records of men arrested locally. These records are used chiefly for court cases.

Discuss Fishery Bills Next Month

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23 (AP).—Chairman Davis, of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries committee, today set February 11 for hearings on two fishery bills affecting the Northwest.

One bill would put into effect a treaty between the United States and Canada for a closed season on halibut, which, Davis said, has approval of both the State Department and the Bureau of Fisheries.

Acting after strikes had been called in several towns near Cordoba, the Governor closed all extremist centres and ordered troops to patrol the city and its environs.

SEIZE CITY HALL

A Communist group took over the City Hall at Colonia de la Sierra and raised the red flag; but when troops approached they fled.

In Seville, all Communist and anarchist headquarters were closed. Cannon were mounted at all civil guard barracks and machine guns were distributed to units throughout the city.

Detachments of troops were placed on rooftops to guard against snipers. Airplane patrols circled over the city. The rooftop units were equipped with flags to warn the airmen not to fire on them.

USE CATHEDRAL TOWER

The Giralda Cathedral tower and roofs of other churches and high buildings were used by soldiers, equipped with telegraph apparatus. Beacons were also used for flashing orders and signals.

In Barcelona, extremist workers took part in a strike which was a sort of prelude to the strike called for Monday, and they succeeded in crippling the city's activities. Governors of all provinces reported themselves ready to quell any revolutionary uprising.

BABY FRETFUL, RESTLESS?

Look to this cause—

Does your baby have nights when he fusses, tosses and seems unable to go quickly, quietly to sleep? Look for one common cause, doctors say. A constipated condition.

To get rid quickly of accumulated wastes which cause restlessness and discomfort, nothing is better than genuine time-proven Castoria.

Castoria, you know, is made specially for children's delicate needs. It is a pure vegetable preparation; contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics of any kind.

It is mild and gentle enough to relieve a young infant's colic pains, yet is an effective regulator for children of school age.

When your baby is upset and unable to sleep, or has a little cold or fever, it is a wise precaution to give him the gentle but sure regulative help of Castoria. With regulation come relaxed comfort and restful sleep.

Keep a bottle always on hand. Children like the taste of real Castoria—which always has the name, Chas. H. Fletcher, on the package.

PENSION FUND UNDER REVIEW

retirement in all city services would mean too great an immediate burden on the fund, in respect of provision required for previous services' allowance.

"In recent years, benefits under the prior service provision have been materially increased, without any corresponding increase in the contributions required under the Act. Before recommending the complete adoption of compulsory retiring ages, it was decided that it would probably be advisable to seek further actuarial advice on the matter.

"It was admitted, however, that a gradual application of a compulsory retirement plan could be instituted in certain branches of the city's service without unduly affecting the basic operation of the fund," the statement concluded.

Last year, in a general revision of the application of the Act to civic staffs, the Government secured expert advice on rearrangement of tables in certain instances. For this purpose Norman Baker, superannuation commissioner, went East to consult with leading actuaries, and returned with very valuable data covering many of the points under review.

Convicts in Despair Kill Each Other Off On Island of Damned

French Penal Colony on Devil's Island Live as in Vile Stables—Escape Impossible Because of Poisonous Serpents and Insects

By HENRY SOMERVILLE
Special to The Colonist

LONDON, Jan. 23 (SNS).—Travelers give an enticing description of voyaging up the River Maroni, which divides French Guiana from Dutch Guiana. If the destination is the port of St. Laurent Du Maroni on the French side, there are places where the ship sails so close to the banks that it is brushed by the overhanging branches of the trees.

There is a wealth of trees, the palm and the coconut interlacing their branches in high, waving plumes above the thick bushy banana tree. There are rich timbers, mahogany and ebony, and perched on the branches, uttering their sharp cries, are vividly colored parrots. Thee is a brilliant sky, touches of violet, green and gold on a field of blue. The atmosphere has the luminosity given it by the tropical sun.

An abruptly different spectacle meets the eye on reaching St. Laurent. Within a long stretch of wooden fencing is a high wall with a great door.

TRANSPORTED CONVICTS

It is the main camp for the transported convicts in France's penal colonies. The outside world speaks comprehensively of those settlements as Devil's Island, but Devil's Island is only one of a group, the one that is used exclusively for prisoners convicted of high treason. Dryfus was the most celebrated of its inmates.

Inside the camp at St. Laurent are rows of rectangular dwellings. They are the prison huts of the convicts. Each hut holds forty hopeless men. A description of them has been published in a report made by a commissioner of the Salvation Army in France after a visit of investigation. A putrid odor strikes the visitor like a volley of filth on first approaching the tenements. The vilest stables are less unclean than these places where men are immured behind locked doors from 6 o'clock at night until 6 o'clock in the morning.

"AIN'T PLASTER SAINTS"

"Single men in barracks ain't no plaster saints," says Kipling's soldier. These men, many of them, are married, but their wives are in France or in French Africa, and they include men who are the worst of humankind, men convicted of murder and banditry. They live under conditions which tend to extinguish every particle of good in them and to induce their abandonment to all that is evil.

The material vileness is less revolting, that the details of moral debasement which are given in an official document transmitted by the Salvation Army to the French Minister of Colonies. General Higgins, of the Salvation Army, in a speech in England said the conditions are indescribable.

KILL EACH OTHER

No guards are on duty in the prison tenements at night. Each forty convicts are left to their own company and inclinations. Things are apt to happen among forty normal men in barracks and the possibilities are increased among forty condemned criminals. It often happens, say Ensign Pean, in the Salvation Army report, that when the guards open the doors in the morning they find a corpse with a knife between the shoulders or in the abdomen. Has the victim met his death in a stupid brawl? Ensign Pean indicates something more tragic, and he has submitted for the French colonies, so it may be taken as more than a surmise. Always, always, he says, the murdered man is a young, newly-married convict.

St. Laurent has other population besides the convicts. There is the administration, of course, and various business enterprises, and a Chinese element. There are also ex-convicts called Liberes, but the name is a mockery, for they cannot leave the island and they are more wretched even than those who are still in penal servitude.

It was the practice in the reign of Queen Elizabeth to brand criminals with red-hot irons. The convicts and ex-convicts of the French penal colonies are branded not less indelibly and more frightfully with the marks of mental torture. Some of the men preserve a certain distinction, reminders that they once were civilized. Others, the majority, have dead, expressionless faces in which despair has obliterated humanity. Their dress is only a pair of cotton pants and they work at tasks like loading and unloading ore which even negroes would find hard in that climate.

LIFE IS SHORT

The best thing that can be said about the life of the convicts in the penal colonies is that it is short. The average life is only five years. The climate, lack of nourishment, disease and vice thin the ranks almost as quickly as new victims arrive. One of the pictures painted by Ensign Pean is of a hospital for convicts. The following as a literal translation.

"There are in this hospital 268 sick, wounded and dying men. If one can use the word dying for the martydom of these human beings consumed by the loathsome diseases, and who, lying on a dirty mattress and uttering blasphemies, will soon breathe their last. Two of the wards are noisy with the sinister, racking coughs of consumptives and I see their pale, emaciated faces contort horribly at each spasm. Another ward is for the infirm, maimed and crippled who, confined to their beds the whole day, have no way of passing the time. There is a ward for those who are in their last agony. I see them stretched on their infected bedding, deformed paralytics, and sufferers from cancer of the face, with no bandages to cover their horrible sores."

PUT AMONG DYING

Among these dying men was one not dying but consigned to the ward because of his entire helplessness through blindness. He had been blind six years. The crime that resulted in his transportation to this Devil's Island was purely military, cowardice in presence of the enemy.

There are a number of men in these places whom the officials believe to be innocent of the crimes for which they are convicted. There are others who, though guilty of homicide, committed the offence in a moment of passion or drunkenness. The majority, it may be admitted, are men who have committed crime after crime. But the hellishness of these convict settlements is that they only harden and debase men. The influences are wholly degrading. There is not a ray of reformatory action in the whole atmosphere. There might be some disciplinary virtue, in labor, compulsory though it be. But for the most part the system fails to keep the men at their tasks with reasonable industry.

Attempts at escape are almost every day occurrences but relatively few succeed. It is easy to evade the guards and get into the forest but the forest is thick with enemies. Swarms of poisonous serpents and venomous insects and pestilent swamps! There are also old escaped convicts who lead an animal existence in the forest and would kill any new fugitive for the sake of a bite of food. In any case the odds are that the lack of food and sleep in the forest would prevent a successful escape. Some men prefer to die in the jungle rather than return to prison, the majority return, broken in spirit and in health.

HUMAN ELEMENT IS IMPORTANT

Victoria Engineers Hear Thoughtful Address by Patrick Philip, M.E.I.C.

"The Strength of Human Materials" was the subject of an unusual and instructive address to the Victoria branch of the Engineering Institute of Canada on Friday evening by Patrick Philip, M.E.I.C., deputy minister of public works. The meeting was held at the home of F. C. Green, surveyor-general, with H. L. Swan presiding.

Strength of materials entered as a basic consideration into all engineering, particularly as to the stress and strain that could be imposed on certain materials for certain purposes. Comparatively little attention was given to the strength of human materials, and this phase of the subject was one that would repay a great deal of study, Mr. Philip submitted.

SOMETIMES OVERTAXED

Unlike inanimate bodies, human material is capable of recovering from strain that has momentarily taken it beyond the normal factor of safety, and actually builds up a resistance to stress, if this stress is applied with reason and discernment. Proof that human materials were at times subjected to stresses and strains beyond their capacity to endure lay in the so-called misfits of life, continued the speaker, the "squarish pegs in elliptical holes."

In planning any work, the strength of human materials was, he insisted, as important a consideration, as the strength of other materials. Loyalty counted over strength, efficiency and ability, and the best results followed the placing of men in positions that called from them their best.

After an entertaining address, in which it was demonstrated that eminence in the matter-of-fact science of engineering in no way displaces an appreciation for philosophy, Mr. Philip was thanked heartily for his unusual paper.

BANDITS CATCH TARTARS IN BANK

Two Laid Low in Gun Duel at Juneau With Employees—Third Robber Flees

JUNEAU, Alaska, Jan. 23 (AP).—"Sourdoughs" of gold rush days, who shot from the hip, were recalled here today when two holdup men were laid low in a gun duel with two employees of B. M. Behrend's Bank. A third bandit escaped.

One of the men, who had scooped up a handful of money in the cashier's cage, dropped it on the floor when he was shot in the stomach. As he fell he fired a wild shot from his revolver, and then the weapon jammed.

Meanwhile, a second bank attache shot a second bandit, standing at the door, in the leg. A third bandit, standing guard outside, fled down the street. The wounded men, neither identified, were rushed to a hospital.

The attempt was made shortly after the bank opened for business. The one man who approached the cashier's cage flashed a revolver, demanding money. When the employees hesitated, he scooped up a small amount and started backing to the door.

Building Health

(Health Service of the Canadian Medical Association)

When you are looking for a home you do not rely on appearance alone; you enquire as to the quality of the materials which went into the building and the way in which they were assembled. You do this because you want your home, not only to be attractive, but to be well built in every sense.

In the same way, your body, in its structure, depends largely upon the food you eat, for it is from your food that the body selects its building materials. The kind of body which you have determines what you can get out of it in the way of physical work and play.

Proteins are the chief body-building foods. During the years of growth, more proteins are required than in later life when the growth has been completed. The animal proteins, which are more readily used than the vegetable, are found in meat, fish, eggs, milk and cheese. The vegetable proteins are present in beans and peas.

The body must be kept warm, and warmth is secured from the fatty foods such as milk, butter, fat meats and nuts. The person who works out of doors during the Winter needs more fatty foods than does the indoor worker.

Energy-producing foods are required to provide the power which is used up by the muscles. Cereals, potatoes and sugar are energy foods, and the manual laborer, the active child and the Rugby player need more of these foods than does the person who is physically inactive.

Milk, fruits and vegetables supply something more than building material, warmth and energy. Mineral salts, such as calcium and phosphorus, which are needed in the building of teeth and bones and in the daily functioning of the body, enter into the composition of these foods.

Bulk is required in the diet to encourage regular bowel elimination. The indigestible fibres from fruits and vegetables add roughage or bulk to the diet. Milk, fruits and vegetables supply also the vitamins required by the body. A sufficiency of the several different vitamins must be available if the body is to be strong and healthy and resistent to infection.

From what has been said it will be evident that our needs for certain types of food vary according to age and occupation. The quantity required depends upon age and activity. At all ages, milk, fruits and green vegetables are indispensable, and for that reason they should be included in the diet each day.

Building health is largely dependent upon the use of proper foods.

A man visiting a country town went to the local barber for a shave. The barber made several slips with his razor, and each time he would paste a small piece of paper over the cut to stop the bleeding.

When the operation was over, the victim handed the man half a crown. "Keep the change, barber," he said. "It's worth half a crown to be shaved by so versatile an artist. Why, you're a barber, butcher and paperhanger all in one."

FORMER RESIDENT DIES IN SYDNEY

Word has been received by relatives here of the death in Sydney, Australia, of Charles Edward Whitlaw, a former resident of Victoria. He was educated in the public and high schools of this city, and was well known in sporting circles, having been a member of the James Bay Athletic Association in the early days.

Mr. Whitlaw went to the Cariboo in 1897, on the construction of the Golden River-Quesnel dam, at what is now the town of Likely. After spending many years there he moved to Vancouver, then to San Francisco. Of late years he made his home in Sydney, Australia.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary Whitlaw, in Sydney, and one brother Laurence, in Victoria.

Assay Office Is Likely to Stay

VANCOUVER, Jan. 23.—Fears that the Government assay office at Vancouver will be closed are not well founded, it is believed in mining circles.

When Hon. H. H. Stevens was in the city last week, officials of the British Columbia Chamber of Mines interviewed him on the subject. While no definite announcement has been received since from Ottawa, the opinion is general that the Government will maintain the office here.

"Now," said the teacher, "which boy can name five things that contain milk."

"I can," shouted a freckle-faced youngster, "Butter and cheese, an' ice cream an' two cows."

BRITAIN AND TARIFFS

It is significant of the breadth of mind which led to the latest British expression of opinion at the polls that the National Cabinet, which developed out of that verdict, should now agree that the question of tariff reform is not to be allowed to bring about its disruption. There are clearly cut cleavages of opinion within that Cabinet on the subject of tariffs. There is the Liberal free trade viewpoint; the more moderate Labor antagonism to any duties which indicate the possibility of foodstuffs becoming dearer; the comparatively mild support given to the general principle of protection by a coterie of Conservative members and the outright advocacy of a general tariff by the bulk of the followers of Mr. Stanley Baldwin. The National Government has adopted a course which cannot fail to commend itself to the British people as a whole. This vexed question of tariffs is to be decided by the House of Commons after a full debate. The last election was a national verdict of a most emphatic character. Sportsmanship, as well as good politics, decrees that the Government should be bound by the decision of Parliament on a question on which the Cabinet cannot agree unanimously.

The verdict of the House of Commons may be regarded as a foregone conclusion. If there was any panacea to be applied to the adverse trade balance of Britain decreed by the British electorate it was that of meeting the situation in correcting that balance by the imposition of a general tariff. The principle was at once recognized by the National Government when it put anti-dumping duties into effect on a long list of commodities. That was a logical preliminary to a general tariff in which such former staunch free traders as Sir John Simon and Mr. Walter Runciman now acquiesce. It may be taken for granted that the only two really prominent members of the National Government who will oppose what is proposed will be Lord Snowden and Sir Herbert Samuel. Both have agreed to the matter being decided by Parliament, and if they adhere to this determination, following the debate on the subject, there is no fear of any major break in the ranks of the National Government.

In his pronouncement on the subject Mr. Ramsay MacDonald emphasizes the fact that the members of the National Government are "essentially united on all other matters of policy." The appeal on tariffs to the House of Commons is designed to interpret "the will of the nation and the needs of the time." It is a big decision, but no less than could be expected from a Government so substantially launched in power by the will of the nation. It is an indication that the administration is not going to let prejudiced and lifelong association with any particular set of ideas stand in the way of the accomplishment of a great national purpose. No one expects Lord Snowden, Sir Herbert Samuel, Sir Donald McLean and Sir Archibald Sinclair to change their viewpoint. What they have, to all intents and purposes promised, is to be bound by the will of the House of Commons, however it may differ with their views. It was that spirit that aligned them in support of a national appeal for a national verdict to deal with the problems of the time.

The application of a general tariff in Britain is an essential preliminary to a successful approach to the problems that will be of outstanding importance at the forthcoming Imperial Conference to be held at Ottawa. There can be no general scheme of preferences applied within the Empire unless Britain has a tariff which will be especially directed against foreign countries. In effect there could be no substantial basis of negotiation for inter-Imperial trade treaties so long as Britain remains, even theoretically, a free trade nation. The goal of a greater measure of self dependence in economic matters within the Empire is a visionary one until in all the Imperial countries there are such tariff structures as will enable the desirable preferential arrangements to be made.

The decision of Britain's National Government to leave the matter to the British House of Commons makes assurance doubly sure that Britain is on the eve of placing her fiscal arrangements in such a position as to insure the success of the coming Imperial Conference. That decision, therefore, is of outstanding importance from the Imperial standpoint. It will be welcomed throughout all the Dominions, and it means that the Imperial Conference will foregather under the happiest omens for its complete success.

OFFERS FOR P.G.E.

For a number of years past reports have come to hand of offers to purchase the Pacific Great Eastern Railway. No details of the nature of such offers have been made public. The offers have multiplied since legislation was passed offering a bonus in land acreage for the purchase of the enterprise and its continuation to Prince George and thence into the Peace River District. There is a glamor in the proposal that millions of acres of tax-free land will be given to purchasers, for there is the prospect offered of a vast colonization scheme in territory which affords many advantages from the standpoint of settlers.

The Provincial Government has set no price or terms on which the P.G.E. may be purchased, beyond the requirement that any purchase which carries with it the granting of the bonus in lands must provide for the building of the railway into the Peace River country. At present there are seven or eight offers being considered by the Government. Perhaps it is incorrect to say that they are being considered; it is more accurate to point out that the Government is endeavoring to ascertain the bona fides of the offers and the financial standing of those who are anxious to acquire the road and the land bonus.

The matter has been in abeyance so long that all possible agencies should be brought into play to discover what genuineness and substantiality there are in the proposals made. Only in that way would it be possible to submit any definite scheme to the Legislature. It is with the latter body that the final decision rests if the road is to be sold. So much has been said about offers for purchase that the time would appear to be ripe for more definite details to be placed before the taxpayers through the Legislature. If there are constantly recurring rumors of proposals for purchase of the P.G.E., the people will be justified in disbelieving the genuineness of any offers made, or else the financial bona fides of those who are endeavoring to acquire the property.

NEW LIQUOR TAX

Among the efforts of Quebec to insure a continuance of a surplus in its budgets, a new liquor tax has been devised. This proposes a levy of from five to fifteen cents on bottles containing spirits. It will be imposed through a stamp tax; a five-cent stamp if the bottle contains thirteen ounces or less; a ten-cent stamp if over thirteen ounces and under twenty-seven, and a fifteen-cent stamp if the capacity of the bottle is over twenty-seven ounces. The stamps have to be purchased in advance by the Quebec Liquor Commission, and they will be furnished by the Provincial Treasurer.

A feature of the tax is that it is to be known as an "unemployment" impost. It is payable to the Liquor Commission by the purchaser of alcohol or spirits. The actual proceeds of this tax will be deposited with the Provincial Treasurer in a special fund set apart for the reimbursement, in capital and interest, of the loans made, or which will be made, for the purpose of aiding the unemployed. As the resolution which embodies the foregoing features of the tax was introduced in the Legislature by Premier Taschereau, it means that the Government is committed to the passage of this legislation.

ENLARGING SPACE CONCEPTIONS

The latest astronomical discovery, made at Mount Wilson Observatory, is that of two spiral nebulae in the constellation of Gemini. The significance they connote is that they are very substantially more distant from the earth than any portions of the universe hitherto discovered; moreover, they are hastened away into further space at the rate of 15,000 miles per second. Their discovery tends to substantiate the theory propounded by Sir James Jeans that the universe is like a soap bubble continually expanding. The nebulae are 135,000,000 light years distant. To ascertain how far they are away it is only necessary to say that light travels at 186,000 miles per second. Therefore the number of seconds in a year multiplied by 186,000 and the result multiplied by 135,000,000 gives the mileage that these nebulae are distant from the earth. The result will give a new conception of the extent of the universe and perhaps throw some doubts on the Einstein theory of relativity.

Federal, State and municipal laws in the United States have brought the number of regulations in effect in that country to over 100,000. No country operates under more restrictions, but perhaps the saving grace of the situation is that many of the laws are more honored in the breach than in the observance.

Note and Comment

By R. B. D.

Confound their politics,
Frustrate their knavish tricks,
God Save the King!

Considering the unsettled state of affairs throughout the world today, and the possibility of the development of serious complications any day, there surely should be an abundance of subjects for conversation without reverting to the subject of the state of the weather or the alleged vagaries of the newspapers. Possibly it is because the weather in this part of the world has been so seasonably pleasant that there has been nothing with which fault could be found except the newspapers. A few days ago we were told by a critic that the trouble with the newspapers was that there was "too much politics in them," and the critic talked as if he believed we were at least to some extent responsible for the alleged dullness of the newspapers because they gave too much space to the discussion of politics.

* * *

Well the treatment of politics by a certain type of public speaker may not be either brilliant or illuminating, but politics is current history and the politicians are making history—and history, ancient or current, is considered by the best minds the most profitable of all the studies of mankind, which may be extended to include womankind in these advanced democratic days. Some of the subjects politicians discuss may be considered trivial by the most advanced type of mind, but history is made up of many apparently insignificant things.

* * *

For instance, there has been a great deal of talk of late about flags, and about the significance and the use of flags. The flag issue has become quite prominent lately. It has become so prominent that an eminent divine has dragged a certain type of flag into his pulpit and delivered a sermon about it and the danger of making that flag into an idol and falling down in worship before it. Hence the reverend gentleman warned the people he was supposed to be leading in worship that they must be careful lest they should be charged with the heinous crime of "flagolatry." We are not sure that we have got the new word right, but readers will know what we mean.

* * *

Another aspect of this flag question is that an effort is being made to drag the issue into current politics. We observe that the Liberals, the radicals and the communists are drawing closer together on that issue. The Liberals want a new flag, the radicals do not appear to want any flag at all, and the communists have adopted a red flag as a symbol of their political aspirations and insist upon carrying their chosen colors at the head of all their processions, displaying them at all their numerous public meetings, and singing a song in vocal tribute to its glories.

* * *

We can understand the state of mind of the radicals and the communists, but it is difficult to understand or to adequately analyse the state of mind of the Liberals—or perhaps we should say the state of mind of the Liberal newspapers, for the mass of Liberals in Canada appear to be well satisfied to remain under the British flag, and the leaders of the Liberal party, including even Rt. Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, never tire of expressing their undeviating and undying loyalty to the British Sovereign and their admiration of British political institutions.

* * *

The Liberal newspapers want a Canadian flag, and declare they will never be satisfied until they get it. They say Canadians should have a flag of their own because all other British self-governing possessions have flags of their own, and because as long as Canadians are content to live under the British flag they will be proclaiming their inferiority in status and their position of alleged dependence upon the Mother country to maintain their independence.

* * *

If that is the way the Liberals feel about it, and if they can convince a majority of the people of Canada that that is the way they all should feel about it, we are sure there will be no obstacle raised in Great Britain to Canadians attaining the ultimate summit of their ambitions. But in the meantime the majority of Canadians appear to be content to live under the Union Jack, and is there any reason why foreign visitors and the children we are educating in our schools at public expense should learn that the British flag is the flag of this country and that there is no particular shame attached to displaying it upon all public buildings and in all public places? Not being particularly attached to mere ceremonial, we are not specially concerned about all this trivial fuss about flying the flag or singing the National Anthem; but there have been occasions when our eyes were delighted upon seeing the old flag flying and a thrill went through our heart when the grand strains of the National Anthem sounded in our ears. If the Liberals who are thoughtlessly pouring their contempt upon such feelings and sentiments have never had such an experience, that is their loss, and it may confound their politics.

Tribute to the Worth of Late "Joe" Drinkwater

By ROBERT DUNN, Jr.

"Joe" Drinkwater, whose body has been found in the waters of Great Central Lake, was a real Western Canadian of the old type. He was a rugged woodsman who knew the lore of the forest and made his home as far from the nearest settlements as possible, amidst the mountains, rivers and streams of the Island. He was a real prospector, always looking for minerals and never losing his faith. He was an expert with the axe, and none was more skilled in the handling of a gun, a rod, or more adept or fearless in the use of a paddle, an oar, or in babying a cranky gasoline engine on water or land. Above all, however, "Joe" was kindness personified in his personal contacts—the soul of hospitality.

I wonder if I have been able to paint the picture in my mind of this man of whose friendship I was proud and with whom I have spent many happy hours. To appreciate him it was necessary to meet him in his natural surroundings—the great wood and mountain lands of the Island's interior. With the twenty-five mile stretch of Great Central Lake at his front door, with the quaint cedarwood "Ark"—hewn out of the forest, split, and put together with his own hands—and with timber-clad hills and mountains rising abruptly from the water on all sides, "Joe" was at home.

Here for years he reigned—"the Laird of the Great Central District." His housebout was fitted with comfortable little cabins. Those who sat at his table were regaled with wholesome food, well and tastily cooked, consisting more often than not of some one or other of the variety of game offered by the country. And the atmosphere was one of scrupulous and cheery cleanliness, for "Joe" was a good housekeeper.

The last time I saw him he took me, with pride, to what he described as his refrigerator. This had been constructed by running a "slope" into the side hill back of his new home. This had been timbered, and, well underground, a large wooden cabinet constructed. Outside the August sun was burning, but the atmosphere in which Joe's larder was placed was cool, almost chilly, and his butter was as solid as when it left the ice box of the manufacturer.

"Joe" entertained hundreds of fishermen and huntsmen during the period he presided over his unique lodge. It is a pity that the register of guests was destroyed in a fire which wiped out the building and its contents some years ago.

There is much more that one would like to say about "Joe." To tell in detail of his experiences as a miner, as a trapper, and to describe how, after selling the "Ark," he built another charming little cedar houseboat which was towed to the head of the lake at the mouths of Drinkwater and McBride Creeks, would run to too great length. I can only say that Great Central Lake will be different without the sterling, sturdy old boy's presence. We shall miss him.

THE BILL

How strange that just a slip of blue
Within my letter-box
Should steal the freshness from the dew,
The color from the phlox.

How strange that just a word or two —Though stronger than the last—
Should make me wish I could undo
A sad and shiftless past.

How strange that just some ciphers plain
Should cloud my morning sky.
There's someone coming down the lane!
So back to bed! Good-bye!
—R. B. Westmacott.

GOLDEN HARMONIES

There is music which brings a message
More sweet than the call of the flute,
A word that echoes within the soul
Long after the viols are mute.
It hints of melodies rarer
Than the masters ever wrote,
And it leaves a gladness that lingers on,
Throbbing after the final note.

There are poems which open vistas
Of glamor to charm the gaze,
And lead the thought into splendid spheres
Too bright for a word's weak praise.
They beckon the laggard fancy
Into regions before unguessed,
And they give to the heart the boundless joy
That comes with a dream possessed.

Oh, weavers of words which quicken
A glory within the breast;
Oh, makers of golden harmonies
Never fully in song expressed,
We, who hunger and thirst for the beauty
Not shaped in an earthly mold,
Give you thanks for the music none can write
And the wonder no lines have told!

DAYLIGHT SAVING

Sir—I was pleased to note in The Colonist of December 29 last, that, thanks to our Chamber of Commerce, there is hope that we may again enjoy the inestimable advantages of a daylight saving measure; and in this connection I would like to make a suggestion.

Instead of changing the clocks each Spring and Fall why not simply legislate to have all work start one hour earlier in the Summer time and make such time start from as early in Spring to say the middle of September? Such an arrangement would offset the argument of objectors on the grounds of confusion with train and steamer schedules.

Provision could be made in the Act whereby any industry such as possibly some branches of agriculture might, after one season's trial, make application for exemption, and exemption be allowed if it could be proved to be in the best interests of those most vitally concerned.

ESQUIMALT ELECTIONS

Sir,—May I be permitted through the medium of your paper to thank all those who supported me in the past elections, including the press.

THE FLAG

Sir,—I notice that the Union Jack is under discussion and am pleased to see it is receiving notice. For years now, ever since I can remember, and I am turned seventy-one, Canada has gone on developing and with marked success, without any worries as to defence against any power. Our great British Fleet and Army have been ready at any moment to protect this Dominion. This fact should be drilled into the minds of our children.

The flag is practically unknown except by the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides. A year or two ago I visited James Island and twice the flag was upside down in front of the school. At Qualicum Beach I have had to draw the attention of the teachers to the same thing. When one of our Governor-Generals was here and was to visit the school, I went up before the Vice-Regal Party arrived and found the flag wrong way up and got it put right. Last Summer I was down at the beach and one of the Summer cottages had a pole up and the flag wrong. I called the ladies' attention to it and asked if there was any trouble as the flag said SOS. This shows what little attention or interest has been taken up to the present date.

THE TRADITION OF JUSTICE

Sir,—Your entertaining and usually tolerant contributor, R. B. D., on Wednesday last raged furiously against university professors and "pulpiteers" for stating their political and social creeds. Surely the free expression, by educated and disinterested men of their ideas on controversial matters is of no little value, whether we agree with them or not?

Why all this indignation because a certain professor has stated that a poor man accused of a crime is at a disadvantage compared to a wealthy law-breaker? Of course he is—to the extent that the rich man can hire the services of the most eminent counsel, instructed by the most experienced solicitors skilled in every device, within the law, that may help to evade it.

But the law is the same for all. Hence, in Canada, the ultimate destination of a thief, rich or poor, is the same.

But a lucrative field for dishonesty, from which poor men are shut out, is still open to astute and unscrupulous financiers and corrupt politicians. The Royal Commission which inquired concerning the Beauharnois scandal revealed an impudent and successful exploitation of a national asset. It has been suggested that the Liberal leader should discipline those of his supporters who had a part in this affair. But is not Parliament, rather than any one party in it, responsible for its honor and the integrity of its members, as well as trustee for the nation's properties?

Up to the present time Parliament has done nothing to punish the offenders or to force them to disgorge ill-gotten gains. Therefore, a repetition, by unworthy people, of similar shameful adventure is encouraged.

Public confidence is shaken. Professors and many other men are offended, and this at a time when our political leaders constantly demand financial sacrifices from all honest citizens, while making none themselves.

H. EAGER.

QUARTERLY MOTOR LICENCES

Sir,—Mr. Arnup's letter regarding men being unable to get employment owing to the present regulations regarding the issue of motor licences strikes a very important note, particularly in these times.

Seeing that motorists are permitted to take out licences at reduced rates after March in each year, surely it would be possible for suitable regulations to be provided which will enable people who must have a car in which to get to and from work, to obtain quarterly licences. Many a man needing to get to and from a job in a low-priced car cannot afford to pay out in a lump sum the $16.90 minimum licence fee required at this time of the year, whereas he could manage to pay $5 for a three months licence, which would mean an appreciable increase in revenue to the department.

Therefore some wide administrative powers might be given to the Superintendent of the Provincial Police to grant such quarterly licences at his descretion to bona fide workers on producing a letter from their employers or prospective employers stating that they need their car in connection with their work. Also such quarterly licences might only apply to cars of the minimum registration class and cars of more or less ancient vintage, say six years old. Such concession might also apply to motor vehicles used for commercial purposes by small businesses which can only afford to operate one car.

Should a quarterly licencee fail to renew his licence or return same within one week after the expiration of his quarter, the department would then simply issue a summons against the licencee. If such disciplinary action were taken promptly there would be few defaulters.

It is readily realized that if such provisions were made without restrictions very many people not needing the concession would take advantage of it and thereby increase the licencing department's labors very considerably, but the foregoing suggested conditions should prevent any misuse of the concession.

If such a scheme could be arranged it would greatly help to put many of the sixty per cent of the usable motor cars in British Columbia, which are now off the road, into service again, thereby creating employment for their owners, gas stations, tire service and repair shop operators, etc. The latter are at present seriously affected by the reduced number of cars now in operation.

I believe that taking last year's and this year's reduction in licences taken out shows that sixty per cent of the usable cars in this province are now off the road.

The Automobile Club of British Columbia might think this suggestion worth taking up with the authorities.

Mr. Arnup is right in suggesting that something in this direction could and should be done in these hard times.

CONCERT BY BLIND

Sir,—In view of the fact that on Thursday, Jan. 28, the Vancouver Blind Orchestra is playing in the Empress Hotel ballroom in Victoria, we wish to place before the public a few facts concerning ourselves in order to avoid any misunderstandings that may be felt about us.

We are solely a musical club organized for the purpose of educating blind people along musical lines, our aim being to provide instruments, music and tuition for those who require it. We started with a very few members and have increased until we have an orchestra of about a dozen members. We are in no way connected with any other blind association, either in Vancouver or elsewhere, and all moneys we receive are used for the purpose of providing the tuition, instruments and music.

Since our beginning we have given concerts in Victoria, Vancouver and New Westminster, all of which have been successful, and I am sure well enjoyed by those who heard us. We play good standard and classical music, and is not an evening spent listening to good music well worth the money paid for it. To those who appreciate and enjoy this class of music we know they will agree with us.

Our representative in Victoria, who has our full authority, will be quite ready to confirm this information about us and tell you that we have always given a good programme which is well worth the money paid for it.

(MISS) MARY MACKNIGHT,
Secretary-Treasurer,
B.C. Instrumental and Vocal Branch of the Blind.

FIFTY YEARS AGO TODAY

(From The Daily British Colonist of January 24, 1882)

General Rosser, chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, is busy perfecting arrangements for the surveys of next season. Major Rogers will again assume management of the Rocky Mountain survey, and for this purpose four parties will leave early in April to continue the explorations of last year.

The steamer Beaver arrived at 12 o'clock last night from the wreck of the "31st of May." The captain reports that the forepart of the vessel is opening up and most of the between decks gone. Very little wreckage was obtained, as she has not yet gone sufficiently to pieces, but a few capstans were salvaged.

All types of business seem to be enjoying an extraordinary rush in trade, and the amount of work being contracted for by builders and manufacturers almost bespeaks a boom. The boot and shoe factories even are overrun with orders for the Spring trade, and many are talking of enlarging their shops.

There will be a full meeting of the City Council this evening as Aldermen Baker and Warren will take their seats for the first time since the elections.

INCREASE SEEN IN DAIRY SALES

Business Exceptionally Brisk in Local Market, With Meat Prices Slightly Higher

Business was exceptionally brisk in the local market yesterday with dairy produce and poultry topping the sales. A fine display of vegetables was also offered the public, and the cabbages, turnips, parsnips, local potatoes, onions and Brussels sprouts on show were of a remarkably good quality.

Meats were a little higher in price than they have been for some time, especially veal and beef. This change in prices is chiefly due to the cold weather in the East. Home-made pies, pickles, cakes and candies are enjoying a steady increase in demand, and yesterday's sales, taken as a whole, were better than they have been for several weeks.

The cooperage stall, always a unique attraction, had a much better display than usual, and the small wine barrels, large umbrella stands and dainty pickle bowls, all made of wood and trimmed with brass, drew much admiration from the shoppers.

Flowers of all kinds were offered for sale, and daffodils, violets and dyed pussy willows, the latter being a novelty not very often seen on display among the booths, were in constant demand and, long before the end of the day, most of the flower stalls were sold out.

ARCTIC BISHOP VISITS OUTSIDE

Journeys From Chesterfield Inlet to Montreal to Receive High Honor

MONTREAL, Jan. 23. — Six feet tall, with a beard sweeping down over his chest, piercing young eyes, and an active step, despite his fifty-six years, Bishop Turquetil, affectionately called the "Bishop of the Arctic," is a visitor in Montreal today. The bishop, known and loved throughout the Northland, made his long journey to civilization to receive one more honor. He is to be created Vicar Apostolic of Hudson Bay in recognition of his valuable services among the aboriginies of Canada's northern latitudes.

His parish, possibly the most unusual in the world, extends from the fifty-sixth parallel to the North Pole, and embraces 1,600,000 square miles, with 7,500 parishioners. He has his headquarters at Chesterfield Inlet just south of parallel sixty-five, where last year he established the world's most northerly hospital.

ACCOMPLISHED LINGUIST

To visit his flock, the bishop travels the Arctic wasteland by dog team, snowshoe and canoe. During his thirty years among the Indians and Eskimo, he has become an accomplished linguist. He also had the unique experience of being the first man to radio broadcast in the Eskimo language, when he sent New Year's greetings to his parishioners over an Ottawa station during a visit to the East a few years ago.

The bishop's journeys to civilization are rare. In undertaking such a trip as his last one, he has to travel overland from his headquarters at Chesterfield Inlet to Churchill, where he connects with the "Mukeg Limited" of the Hudson Bay Railway and traveled down the 500-mile line to The Pas, and from there by Canadian National Railways to Winnipeg.

The bishop does not intenc to stay long in civilization. His people need him. He has his hospital and his parish to oversee, and there can be no long holidays when a parish covers more than a million square miles.

BOAT OF MISSING YOUTHS IS FOUND

Hope Given Up for Safety of Two Out in Sound During Thursday's Gale

BELLINGHAM, Wash., Jan. 23 (AP).—Last waning hope for the safety of Dwight Standen, twenty-one, and Fred Selene, nineteen, prominent Bellingham youths, missing since Thursday, vanished late today when the small dory, which had been manned by the youths on a sea excursion, was found overturned near the oyster beds of the East Point Oyster Company at Blanchard.

With its discovery, coastguardsmen, deputy sheriffs and Aviator R. C. Graham abandoned temporarily their search for the missing pair. Tomorrow a systematic search will be made of the entire waterline from Skagit County to Bellingham, in an effort to recover the bodies.

While officials have given up hope of finding the youths alive, the anxious parents are still determined, and tonight were making a search of nearby islands in company with friends all in small launches.

The youths, sons of prominent Bellingham contractors, were believed to have been victims of a heavy gale which swept Puget Sound Thursday afternoon as they attempted to row their small boat from Vendovia Island to Bellingham.

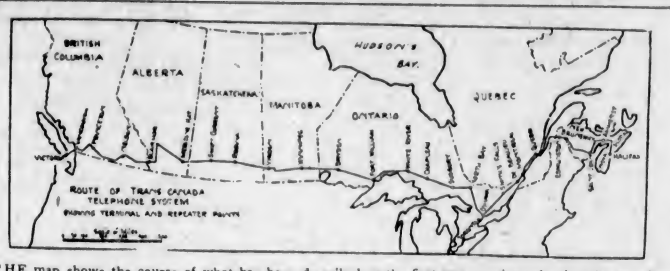
Transcanada Telephone Is Ready



THE map shows the course of what has been described as the first transcontinental voice highway from Victoria to Halifax. Special amplifying apparatus ("repeaters") and terminal equipment is provided at twenty-five points on the route. These, it is explained, are automatic in their action, and there is no physical repetition required. A message accordingly occupies only one-thirtieth of a second in its passage from Victoria to Halifax. The new service connecting up by long distance telephone the various parts of the Dominion over a wire which is contained entirely within the bounds of Canada will be initiated on Monday morning.

LUKE PITHER PASSES AWAY

Pioneer Resident of Victoria Took Active Part in City's Business Life

The death of Luke Pither, at his home on Fulton Road, Gordon Head, yesterday, removes a citizen who had been associated with the business life of the city for a period of more than half a century. Of late years the deceased had resided at Gordon Head, where he had a small farm, to which he had retired after giving up more active business associations in the city.

For a number of years after taking up his residence there, he devoted his time to the raising of fancy poultry for the market. In this line he developed a large trade, catering to a special market.

BORN AT STAFFORD

Mr. Pither was born at Stafford, N.Y., seventy-five years ago. As a young man he came West, taking up his residence in Victoria, where for a time he was engaged in the meat business, being associated with the B.C. Meat Market, at the corner of Government and Yates Streets.

Later he entered the hotel business in New Westminster. From that city he came back to Victoria and conducted the Occidental Hotel, which was then famous with the traveling public all along the Pacific Coast.

ENTERS PARTNERSHIP

Mr. Pither later entered the wholesale liquor business in this city, being joined subsequently by Max Leiser. This partnership existed for many years, until in 1912 they sold out the business. It was then that Mr. Pither retired to Gordon Head, where he had lived ever since. For some time he had not been in the best of health.

Mr. Pither is survived by his widow and by a niece, Mrs. Charles Banner, living in this city.

The funeral will be held on Monday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, from Hayward's B.C. Funeral Chapel, proceeding to Ross Bay Cemetery, where Rev. A. de B. Owen will conduct services at the graveside.

CHESTER STAPLES CALLED BY DEATH

The deceased was a frequ nt visitor to Victoria, spending several Summers here. He resided with his family at Margate Avenue, Oak Bay, and was a popular member of the Victoria Golf Club.

Besides the widow, he is survived by five children, all residing at Cranbrook.

Financial Houses Must Pay More to Saskatchewan

REGINA, Jan. 23.—Such financial institutions as banks, trust, loan and mortgage companies are going to contribute a greater share than they do now to the revenues of this province, it was officially stated today.

From such sources, under the provisions of the Corporations Taxation Act, Saskatchewan now derives revenue of slightly more than $4,000,000, a large percentage coming from the insurance companies.

In the effort to balance the budget by increasing revenue and reducing some forms of public services, the Government proposes to make amendments to the Corporations Taxation Act, with a view of bringing the revenue from that source upwards of $800,000, the banks to pay a fair share of the 100 per cent increase.

TO MAKE START ON ESTIMATES

Civic Spending Bodies Meeting This Week to Consider Annual Budgets

Various spending bodies of the city's administration will make a preliminary canter along the obstacle-strewn road of estimated revenues and expenditures toward balancing the annual civic budget with three boards holding sessions this week.

On Monday night the City Council will likely receive a draft of the estimated revenues for 1932. The city comptroller has been hard at work for the past ten days to meet the wishes of Alderman P. R. Brown, chairman of the finance committee, who has asked for the "revenue side" of the budget at the earliest possible moment.

SCHOOL ESTIMATES

The Board of School Trustees is also meeting on Monday night to receive a draft of estimated expenditures of the building and grounds committee, which held a meeting during the past week. It is hinted the committee's report may show a considerable reduction from the past year. The board's finance committee has yet to meet to decide what revenue may be expected and what expenditures will have to be incurred to meet the requirements of the city's educational system. The question of salaries is not likely to enter into the discussion tomorrow night, it was intimated by W. F. C. Pope, secretary of the board.

POLICE COMMISSION

The police commission plans to meet on Wednesday afternoon, when Secretary T. Harvey Bamford will present the commissioners with estimates for the year. Tentative figures show but slight difference from the past year, it is stated.

While the boards are making a start on the estimates, it is not expected that the tax rate will be announced before April and possibly not before the middle of May, depending on what action is taken by the Provincial Legislature concerning certain proposals to be advanced by the city's legislative committee.

GOAT BREEDERS NAME OFFICIALS

Miss J. E. Harvey Elected President at Annual Meeting Here of Provincial Association

Miss J. E. Harvey was elected president of the British Columbia Goat Breeders' Association at the annual meeting held here last night. Other officials chosen were: Vice-president, Mrs. E. J. Horne; secretary-treasurer, George Pilmer, Victoria; directors, Thomas Pearce, Victoria; J. F. Rumble, Ladysmith; Mrs. E. E. Holland, New Westminster; Mrs. T. Oliver, Edmonds, and Thomas Lambert, Powell River; auditor, M. C. Hooper, Victoria.

The address of the retiring president indicated that the goat business had been seriously affected by the business slump, and continued that it was in times like the present that the milk goat proved its real value, as milk, butter, cheese and meat obtained from goats could provide half the living of a family.

During the evening it was learned that eighteen goats had been shipped for the first time from Victoria to Nova Scotia; otherwise, however, sales were low, the Prairie market being practically extinct.

A world's record was made during the year by the Saanen doe, Echo of Deerfield, owned by Miss J. E. Harvey, Cordova Bay. At first freshening this goat gave 4,240.6 lbs. in 365 days, an average of more than 4½ quarts per day, with a butter-fat test of 4.66 per cent.

The Department of Commerce at Washington has lifted certain defective vision restrictions and thereby made it possible for 5,000 more to join the ranks of aviation pilots by wearing glasses with corrective lenses.

The Efficient, Sympathetic Service Rendered by the Late S. J. Curry, of the S. J. Curry & Son Funeral Home, Will Be Continued by His Son, Harry J. M. Curry, Under His Personal Supervision

CANADA LINKED BY TELEPHONE

Provinces Joined Together by System Which Is All Within Dominion

With Lieutenant-Governor J. W. Fordham Johnson conveying to the rest of Canada the message from the Pacific Coast, the first all-Canadian transcontinental telephone service will be initiated at 9 o'clock on Monday morning. The Dominion-wide service will be inaugurated by His Excellency the Governor-General, delivering a message from the capital at Ottawa.

A link-up will be effected whereby the capitals of the various provinces will be brought into touch with Ottawa, and will be able to hear all that is spoken over Canada's first voice highway from ocean to ocean. In turn, starting with Halifax and continuing across the Dominion to Victoria, the various lieutenant-governors will contribute messages of congratulation.

The ceremony will begin at Ottawa at 12 noon, which is 9 o'clock, Victoria time. British Columbia has special reason to be proud of the transcanada telephone accomplishment, for in building their portion British Columbia telephone men have done a job that ranks as one of the most difficult of its kind ever carried out on this Continent.

HEAVY OUTLAY

More than a million dollars has been spent on the British Columbia section of the line by the B.C. Telephone Company. Twenty - five thousand new telephone poles have been built across the province from Vancouver to the Rockies, 626 miles. They carry on their strong wooden shoulders four gleaming strands of copper wire, approximately one-sixth of an inch thick and weighing more than a million pounds.

It took four carloads of insulators to equip the crossarms of the British Columbia poles. The insulators are made of pyrex, the special material used for the kind of glass dishes that can be placed in the oven without cracking. The worst stretch of country was that east of Hope. Trying to find a route, the telephone engineers climbed as high as 7,000 feet. On one trip they made two miles in eight hours.

For every one of the 25,000 telephone poles, a stake had to be placed to indicate location. To place these stakes, engineers walked about 2,000 miles.

4,200-MILE ROUTE

On the new transcanada line, a telephone conversation between Vancouver and Halifax will follow a route 4,200 miles long. The amount of current used for such a conversation is extremely small. As a matter of fact it is from about four to six thousandths of a watt. An ordinary house light burns ten or twelve thousand times as much current as that.

"But how on earth can such a small amount of current travel 4,200 miles?" one probably wonders. It is only possible because of "repeaters," which is the technical name for amplifying devices placed at intervals along the line. There will be twenty-three of these "repeaters" between Vancouver and Halifax. They consist essentially of vacuum tubes such as are found in the ordinary radio set, except that that the tubes are larger. When the current reaches a "repeater" it has been weakened by a long journey, but the vacuum tubes revive it and send it on its way refreshed.

The voice of a Victoria party will reach Halifax, 4,200 miles away, in about one-thirtieth of a second.

CHARGED WITH FRAUD BY PASSING CHEQUE ON LOCAL MERCHANT

Henry A. Hill, charged with obtaining $4.75 from Norman L. Maynard by false pretences and with intend to defraud, appeared before Police Magistrate George Jay in the city police court yesterday morning and was remanded until Tuesday morning for further hearing.

The accused is alleged to have told Mr. Maynard that he was a friend of Mr. Maynard's brother, who died overseas while serving with the 103rd Battalion in France. Mr. Maynard testified that he had cashed one cheque on a bank in Parksville, Ontario, and later a second cheque made out in the name of the accused on a bank in Vancouver.

City Prosecutor C. L. Harrison produced a record card, which showed that a person named H. A. Hill had been given suspended sentence in a Vancouver court on a charge of false pretences on December 16, 1931. The hearing was adjourned to permit the police to communicate with the Vancouver authorities concerning the nature of the charge there and the reasons for suspended sentence.

Universal Quality of Burns' Poetry Praised

Prof. G. C. Sedgewick Gives Memorable Address to 250 Guests at Tenth Annual Dinner of Victoria Burns Club in Chamber of Commerce

"If you did not have the Burns of drink and the Burns of love you would not have Burns the poet," claimed Dr. G. C. Sedgewick, head of the department of literature at the University of British Columbia, in the course of a memorable and long-applauded address which he gave last night when toasting "The Immortal Memory" at the tenth annual dinner of the Burns Club of Victoria.

About 250 Burns enthusiasts gathered for the occasion round the well-laden and attractively-decorated tables at the Chamber of Commerce auditorium, and under the genial chairmanship of the club president, John Hosie, speeches, songs and Scottish dances to the accompaniment of the pipes provided generous entertainment until nearly midnight.

Dr. Sedgewick's was the principal address of the evening, and in emphasizing the major importance of "Hallowe'en," "Holy Fair," "The Jolly Beggars," "Holy Willie's Prayer" and "Ode to a Louse," he brought a profound and original analysis to the legacy of verse left to the world by the Scottish poet.

THE WRONG THINGS

The world at large, including most Scotsmen, was accustomed to speak most often of the things in Burns which were of secondary interest, said Dr. Sedgewick.

"We Scotch people do Burns little honor by being a little shamefaced about Burns. He was full of faults (which were very much on the surface), and some people use him as a horrible example of what not to do. But Burns saw himself as all men fear to see themselves; he saw himself as he really was, which very few men have the courage to do. That is the universal element in Burns, an element which it would be well for Scotsmen to look for," said the speaker, who recalled the Calvinistic faith in which Burns had been reared with its doctrine of original sin.

LACK COURAGE

Twice within the last twelve months Dr. Sedgewick had heard sermons which had held up Burns as a terrible example. His own conclusions were that many men would tread in Burns' footsteps were it not for their lack of courage. Most people overlooked the fact that but for his profound knowledge of the seamy side of life, Burns could not have written even the poems which are most popularly quoted and sung "when we are on our best behavior."

Everyone was familiar with "Ye banks and braes." But the world must either do without that song or take with it the seamy side of Burns, for there could be no great poetry, no universal voice, unless it was based upon bitter personal experience.

DISLOYAL

Any Scotsman who apologized for Burns was disloyal to his own race. "Hallowe'en," "Holy Fair," "Holy Willie's Prayer" presented humanity reduced to the lowest common denominator, and it would be well for every man and woman to read them and see what they themselves were like at their worst.

Lacking culture in the sense of college education, Burns had made fun of the Scots people for their passion for education. But he had done so with a little envy. Personally the speaker said he was glad that Burns had never had a college education, as if he had he would never have written that supreme satire, "To a Louse." Here was presented the spectacle of pretentious pride contradicted by Fate.

Burns had given Scots folk virtues which they had no right to claim, and Scotsmen's reputation for humor today was a reflection of Burns' own humor.

"The voices that endure are the voices of the poets, not the voices of our politicians, statesmen or soldiers," said the speaker. Burns had the "universal voice," "the knowledge that men are born equal in the sense that they have the right to a chance." If this were not true, man might as well fold his hands and wait for the end. Burns had not only recognized this, but for the first time in the world's history had put it into words which all men could understand.

SPLENDID PROGRAMME

The dinner menu included numerous characteristic Scottish dishes, including the Royal Scotch Haggis, which was piped in, in traditional manner, by Pipe-Major Cameron, being carried in by Charles Mills, late inspector of the Shanghai police.

The customary grace, "Some hae meat and canna eat," etc., was pronounced by the chairman, John Hosie, who opened the programme part of the entertainment by proposing the toast to The King, and subsequently he gave one of the wittiest speeches of the evening in his toast to "The Lassies," very cleverly responded to by Mrs. A. S. Christie. Other interesting toasts were as follows: "The Navy, Army and Air Forces," proposed by Mr. Hosie, replied to by Commander R. I. Agnew, R.C.N., and Brigadier J. Sutherland Brown, C.M.G., D.S.O.; "The Immortal Memory of Sir Walter Scott," proposed by Mr. Hosie; "Land of Our Adoption," proposed by Colonel Ross Napier (in the unavoidable absence of Premier Tolmie) and responded to by Adam Bell; "Burns Club of Victoria," proposed by Reginald Hayward, M.P.P., and replied to by Neil Pollock, and "The Chair and Artists," proposed by James Dewar.

SEVERAL ARTISTS

The several artists, all of whom were accorded an enthusiastic reception, were Mrs. W. H. Wilson, Mrs. T. R. Bowden, James Galloway and George Gray, very fine soloists who contributed popular Scottish songs, and Miss Adeline Grant, who gave spirited versions of Highland dances to the accompaniment of pipe music by Pipe-Major Wallace. J. G. Brown led the community singing.

Among those at the head table, additional to the chairman and above-mentionad speakers, were Mrs. Agnew, Mrs. Sutherland Brown, Hon. Mr. Justice M. A. Macdonald, Mrs. R. B. McMicking, Donald McAdie, Miss Hosie, A. Bell, Hastie Cochrane (the club bard, who read some original verses composed for the occasion), Bruce Walker, Mrs. Pollock and Mrs. Jaffray.

City & District

Annual Meeting—The annual meeting of the Saanich Welfare Association will be held on Wednesday, at 2:30 p.m., at the Health Centre, when reports from the various committees will be received and election of officers take place.

Two Fires—The city fire department responded to two small fires yesterday. One was at 2121 Sayward Avenue, where a portion of the porch was damaged, and the other was at 508 Gorge Road, where a chimney was on fire. Little damage was done in either case.

Dairymen to Meet—A meeting of the Victoria and Saanich Farm and Dairymen's Association will be held at Royal Oak Hall on Friday, January 29, at 8 p.m., to elect directors for the forthcoming year. All members are urgently requested to attend.

Invited to Congress — Victoria City Council has been invited to send delegates to the annual Congress of the Royal Sanitary Institute, to be held this year in Brighton, England. The Congress will open on July 9 and continue until July 16.

Premier Returns—Premier Tolmie arrived back in the city yesterday, in excellent health and spirits, and none the worse for his Vernon trip, where he addressed the annual gathering of the British Columbia Fruit Grower's Association. Though his actual birthday was two days off, the Premier was in receipt of early congratulations yesterday on his sixty-fifth anniversary, which will occur Monday.

Song Accepted—The verses of a local composer, Alice Parker, wife of the well-known local artist, Arthur H. Parker, have been chosen by Burrell Van Buren for a song, with the engaging title of "Rest Awhile," for which he has written the music. The song has just come off the press, the music being simple but tuneful with an easy compass, and the poem has sentimental appeal. The song is written in the key of F, and has a violin obbligato, which is attractive.

Relief Official Coming—M. H. McGeough, assistant Dominion director of relief in British Columbia, will arrive in Victoria Monday, it was stated yesterday at the Department of Public Works. Mr. McGeough is bringing with him the text of the agreement between the Dominion and Provincial Governments as to the future course to be pursued in relation to provincial camps for the unemployed. No further action will be taken by the Government until after his arrival, it was intimated.

Market Opening Cited—In advices from Hon. T. G. Coventry, British Columbia markets representative at London, yesterday, the Government was advised that there exists an opportunity for the sale of British Columbia salmon on the English market. Sentiment in favor of Empire trade has greatly increased inquiries in Britain for all Canadian goods, and one large import house has conducted a comprehensive drive for the last few weeks, centring on Canadian salmon. From his investigations on the ground, Mr. Coventry believes that attention could be paid with advantage to brine freezing of fish for shipment to that market.

The officers of the association are: W. F. Somers, president; W. T. Edwards, vice-president; R. S. Twining, manager and secretary, and Thomas Walker, N. C. Bell, William Tucker and G. A. Vantreight, members of the board of directors.

The annual statement revealed that the first shipment of canned loganberries to the English market had met with outstanding success. Four thousand cans of this fruit were shipped during last season and it is planned to double the export this coming Summer.

FRUIT MARKETED

Eighteen tons of jam strawberries and 5,000 crates of strawberries were marketed by the association during the year. Other fruit marketed included twelve tons of gooseberries, seven tons of black currants, five tons of cherries and a large quantity of crated raspberries, cherries and plums.

The financial report revealed that all accounts had been paid and that a 25 per cent decrease in the return to the growers was reported. The fact that all accounts have been paid and the association has no other obligations to meet was regarded as an enviable position to be in under the present circumstances.

Will Shakespeare Displace Bible in Titles of Novels?

Christian Scriptures and Elizabethan Playwright Largely Drawn Upon by Modern English Novelists — Lists of Fiction Captions Taken From Former Source

By REV. DR. J. K. UNSWORTH

WILL Shakespeare displace the Bible in supplying titles for works of fiction? Shakespeare's plays and the Christian Scriptures are the great English classics of the human heart and novelists search in them for names for their brain children. It may be fairly maintained that these two together provide more captions for books than all other literature combined.

The contest for first place has developed during the present century. The nineteenth century novelist did not use titles descriptive of the motif of his story and had no occasion therefore to employ "leaning titles," that is, words or phrases taken from other writings. The roster of Victorian and pre-Victorian fiction is simply a list of names of persons or places, the few exceptions being "Pride and Prejudice," "Vanity Fair," "Our Mutual Friend," and one or two others with names slightly suggestive.

Around about 1900 came the flair for giving the novel a name that had a sales value. The publishers were probably responsible. They wanted "catchy" titles. In indication of this change is seen in the list of best sellers of each of the last thirty years, as supplied by the Golden Book of New York, in which twenty of the thirty carry suggestive titles.

As to Shakespeare as a hunting ground for titles, the writer is indebted to Prof. H. J. Holsknecht, of New York University, who cited in one of last year's numbers of the Shakespeare Association Bulletin some thirty-four books and plays whose names were drawn from the great playwright. Their suggestiveness is shown in the following: "Life's Fitful Fever," "All Our Yesterdays," "And Such Small Deer," "There Is a Tide," and thirty others. "Macbeth" supplies the largest quota.

BIBLE TITLES GIVEN

In presenting some facts regarding fiction titles from the Bible, it may be noted that three of the thirty best sellers mentioned above are from the Scriptures: "The House of Mirth," "The Inside of the Cup," and "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"; "If Winter Comes" is from Shelley; there are none from Shakespeare.

In another list of the best books that appeared from 1907 to 1926 were found twenty-six novels bearing names of Bible parentage, sixteen of these being from the Old Testament. Over one third of these, it is noteworthy, are taken from that vividly written and most human document, the Book of Genesis.

The Old Testament's contribution includes the following: "In His Image," Rolfe; "On the Face of the Waters," Steele; "A Bush That Burned," McLure; "The Mother of All Living," Keable; "The Tree of Knowledge," Baroja; "The Fruit of the Tree," Wharton; "A Deputy Was King," Stern; "The Heart of a Fool," White; "The Valley of Vision," Van Dyke; "Wings of the Morning," Tracy; "The Way of a Man," Hough; "House of Mirth," Wharton; "Valley of Decision," Wharton; "As a Man Thinks," Thomas; "Vain Oblation," Geroud; "Wings of a Dove," James.

Of the ten found in the New Testament seven come from the Gospels. They are: "The Seats of the Mighty," Parker; "These Twain," Bennett; "A Certain Rich Man," White; "Far Country," and "Inside of the Cup," Churchill; "The Children," Wharton; "Barren Ground," Glasgow; "The Wind Bloweth," Byrne; "This Freedom," Hutchison," "The Wages or Sin," Malet; "The Street Called Straight," King.

BIBLE AND RECENT BOOKS

In more recent titles the Bible continues to be fertile soil for names. The Book Review Digest of W. H. Wilson, of New York, for March-August last lists five from this ancient but very modern literature: "Pure in Heart," Werfel; "Waters of Babylon," Wallis; "A Child Is Born," Harrison; "Ministering Angels," Burke; "Two Thieves," Komroff.

Another grouping of later novels furnished the following: "Satan as Lightning," King; "Babes and Sucklings," Wylie; "Waters Under the Earth," Ostenso; "Bethel," Millen; "Instead of the Thorn," Meyer; "As Through a Glass," Wallbridge; "Unquenched Flame," Reynolds; "Whited Sepulchres," Fryer; "War in Heaven," Williams; "They That Go Down," Steen; "Ten Thousand Shall Fall," King; "By Reason of Strength," Johnson; "Fell Among Thorns," Soutar; "All We Like Sheep," McLung.

In addition to those titles that are direct quotations from the Scriptures, there is a considerable number that manifestly refer to some Bible passage. "The Rich Are Always With Us" and "The Wages of Goodness" are of this class, as also "Sword in the Soul," which alludes to the aged Simeon's statement to the mother of Jesus presaging her coming tragedy. "Trimmed Lamps," Henry; "The Other Wise Man," Van Dyke; "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," Ibanez, may also be included. Sienkiewicz's great novel, "Quo Vadis," has been incorrectly referred to the Vulgate of John xiii, 36. It is rather based upon the legend of Christ meeting Peter as he was fleeing from Rome. "Quo vadis, Domine?" ("Whither bound, O Master?") cried the apostle, and the Master answered: "I go to Rome to be crucified in thy stead."

FEWER FROM SHAKESPEARE

As might be expected from a book that emphasizes the unity of the race and the responsibility of each generation to its successor, the Bible is rich in material for novelists who discuss the question of heredity. Under this head come such late volumes as "Unto This Fourth," "The Third and Fourth Generation," "Him and His Seed Forever," "Sins of the Fathers," and "Seed."

The list of titles that have been assembled in this cursory sketch show how full of human interest is Christianity's classic and its holy book. It seems to indicate also that it has supplied the twentieth century novelists with the major number of names for their products.

Should the modern fashion of using descriptive captions persist, will Shakespeare crowd the Bible off the back of the novels of, say, twenty-five years hence? Over large areas the former is part of the curriculum where the latter is omitted. In this matter the youth of Great Britain and Ireland have an advantage over those of the United States, where the daily reading of the Bible is prohibited in the public and high schools of most of the States, though passages are incorporated in the school readers.

Canada is little better. In most of the nine provinces there is no Bible reading in either the public or high schools. A generation is growing up on the American continent that is not familiar with the "text book of the nineteenth century." Literature professors bewail the students' ignorance of our greatest classic.

On the other hand, the revival of religious education among the churches may reinstate the Bible in its former position. Then, too, our total English literature, and not the least Shakespeare, is so saturated with Scripture that the embryonic novelists of the future will absorb much of it indirectly.

Crown Prince With Cargo of Royalty

BACK at the helm, but not the helm of state that he held for a brief period as King of Rumania, Crown Prince Michael, son of King Carol, is shown as he pilots a bobsled with a cargo of his royal relatives, down a snowy slope at Sinaia, where the ruling family is enjoying Winter sports. Behind Prince Michael is his aunt, Princess Ileana, and her husband, Archduke Anton of Hapsburg.

Registration of Voters for 1932 List Is Underway

New names are being added daily to the official list of persons entitled to vote at the provincial election in the electoral districts of Victoria City and Esquimalt. Enrolment is being made at the Courthouse, Bastion Street, with G. H. Mabon, registrar, in charge.

Application to be placed on the list may be made either at the Courthouse or at the office of any election commissioner. Since the last general election numbers of voters of Victoria City and of Esquimalt have changed their place of residence. It is therefore essential that they should notify the registrar in writing of their new address.

No one is entitled to be on the list in more than one electoral district. Anyone who has registered in another electoral district, but is now residing in the Victoria City or Esquimalt electoral district, and who desire to vote where he or she is living, should apply for removal notice, which may be obtained at the office of the registrar of the district in which they were provincially registered.

The registrar of voters' office is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily, and from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Saturdays.

"The natives of West Central Africa take to drama as ducks take to water," writes a missionary at Chisamba, Angola, in describing Christmas time there. "Best of all was their dramatization of their own folk stories. Their acting was bright, realistic, arresting and humorous."

In another part of this, the oldest newspaper on the Pacific Coast, and which all who wish to keep themselves well informed will read every morning at, or before, or after breakfast, you will find a full account of the great dinner, the toasts, the speeches (short and long) and, best of all, the songs—and all in memory of Robert Burns, the great Nature poet, who was born in Ayr, on January 25, 1759, or just 173 years ago.

Never in the whole world's history has there been so universally beloved a poet. Burns is loved the world over, and more honored is his memory than that of any other single writer we have ever heard of.

He wasna unco guid! He was just a man, a most human man, with a kind and poetic soul, and there never has been and, maybe, never will be a poet more deserving of the world's love and admiration. Only self-complacent egotists attempt to deprecate his well-earned fame.

THE SONGS O' BURNS

The well-read man his Bible heeds,
His Shakespeare close beside him;
His Tennyson and Spencer reads;
All these with thought provide him!
And, should some sorrow crush his heart,
They comfort and control him;
And songs of Burns his smiles will start,
With Joyance, to console him!

Just Roamin' Around

By TWO ROVERS

"O wad some pow'r the giftie gie us
To see ourels as ithers see us."

Thus wrote the immortal poet, Robert Burns, whose birthday it is tomorrow.

We, who have much Scotch blood in our otherwise English and Irish veins, have, for several days, been wishing that "some pow'r" would give us the gift of being able to be in two places at once; for the Burns banquet was held last night, and we had already accepted another most kind and attractive invitation.

Two Rovers will not break their word, even when a second invitation is almost violently tempting, having accepted a first.

But, oh! how glorious it would be if one could send the very English and Irish part of one to keep one appointment, and allow the Scotch side to enter into the joys of a banquet given by the Burns Club, of Victoria, B.C., than which there is no more kindly hospitable society in our midst.

CALGARY SPEAKER FOR CLUB HERE TUESDAY

The soloist of the afternoon will be Mrs. Georgina Watt.

Runty Learns That There Are Eggs and Eggs

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

More often than you ever dream
Are things and folks not what they seem.
—Old Mother Nature.

This isn't always their own fault. By no means. It is often due to failure on the part of others to see them truly. They may seem to be one thing while in reality they are something altogether different, largely because others think they are what they are not. So it is never wise to judge wholly by appearances.

Runty, the venturesome little Possum, was in Farmer Brown's henhouse looking for eggs, but he was sure he would know one if he found it. Unc' Billy Possum, his father, had told him that it would be big and smooth. So when he climbed into the first neat and found something smooth and rounded he hadn't a doubt that it was an egg. His eyes glistened. He smelled of it, but there was no odor. He felt of it. It was hard and smooth, so smooth that his little paws slipped from it. It was bigger than he had thought it would be, a third as big as himself, for he was still a little fellow.

Unc' Billy had said that the smooth part was a shell that he could bite through. He decided that he would try that egg then and there. One end was smaller than the other. He laid down beside it and clasped it with both hands and feet and tried to bite through the small end. His teeth slipped off. Try as he would he couldn't bite through that shell. What was more, he had hard work to hold on to it. It kept slipping from his grasp. He began to lose his temper. He bit harder than ever and his teeth slipped off as before. It made him so angry that he kicked foolishly and that egg slipped away from him and out of the nest down to the floor, where it landed with a dull thump.

Runty peered down. Then he climbed down. That shell hadn't broken. It hadn't even cracked. Runty sniffed in disgust and then climbed to another nest. It also had an egg and this egg was just like the other. He couldn't bite it,

Try as he would he couldn't bite through that shell

try as he would. This he also kicked out on the floor and it didn't break. Runty was becoming discouraged and oh, so disappointed. He began to wonder what sort of teeth Unc' Billy had to bite through a shell like that. He climbed from nest to nest. Some were empty and others had eggs just like those he had found. He tried them all with the same result. Of course, you know what they were. They were china eggs, china nest eggs put there by Farmer Brown's Boy.

Just as Runty was about ready to give up he found a nest with two eggs in it. Yes, sir, there were two eggs in it. One was just like the others, but one was different. It was a little smaller and it felt different. When he tried his sharp teeth on the small end they went through. Quicker than I can tell it Runty had a hole in that end and was sucking and lapping out the contents. He was getting his first taste of egg and liking it. He understood now why Unc' Billy wanted an egg so badly.

He forgot Unc' Billy was waiting outside. He forgot that he was in a strange place. He forgot everything but the feast he was having. When nothing but shell remained of that egg he went hunting for another. As before he found several of those white china eggs, but now he knew the difference between these and real eggs the moment he touched one, and wasted no more time trying to bite a hole in one.

At last in the far corner nest of the upper row he found another real egg and once more forgot everything but the feast he was having. Those two eggs were the only ones in the henhouse. They had been laid after Farmer Brown's Boy had collected the eggs the morning before. Meanwhile Unc' Bill was waiting impatiently outside and wishing with all his might he could make himself as small as Runty long enough to squeeze through that little opening.

"Ah do wish that youngster would roll me out an aigg," sighed Unc' Billy.

The next story: "Runty Goes to Sleep."

HOW IT STARTED

By Jean Newton

THAT WORD "JOSH"

"Now don't josh me" is one form of expression in which we sometimes hear used that popular term "Josh." Or "Don't mind him—he's only joshing."

What is meant of course is light talk, banter, joking.

We have the term from "Josh Billings," the pseudonym of the American Humorist, Henry Wheeler Shaw. Josh Billings was born in 1818 and died in 1885.

Y.W.C.A. NOTES

Mrs. Hugh MacKenzie has the group on current events each Friday night at 7:30 o'clock. These talks are interesting and educational. Friday night the Glee Club had its usual practice, with more new members. Saturday morning at 10 o'clock is the children's story hour. Miss Hazel King conducts the story telling and it is followed by games with the children. Miss Astle will superintend the games. Saturday afternoon the Y.W.C.A. girls went for a hike in the sunshine. They packed their lunches, made a fire, climbed Mount Tolmie and returned about 6 o'clock.

Deaconess Simcox's Sunday afternoon group is growing steadily. There is a fireside group at 4:30 o'clock on Sunday, in the parlors, for the girls in residence and their friends. Whole suites of furniture are being planned by some of the ambitious girls in the wood carving class. The class meets at 6:30 on Tuesday night and Mrs. Yates is glad to give assistance to all new comers.

Some very pretty china is being decorated in Mrs. Willis' Tuesday night class. It meets at 7:30 and it is hoped that more girls will interest themselves in it.

The Tri-Y-Welcome Club meets every Thursday night at 6 o'clock and every member is asked to come and bring a girl friend. Next Thursday night they are to meet in true club fashion and at 7:30 o'clock there is to be a discussion on the care of the skin and hair. Thirty-seven girls were present at the last supper.

The linen shower for the Y.W.C.A. this year will be held in the lounge of the building. It is to be on Friday, February 5, from 2:30 to 6 o'clock. Tea will be served in the lounge and Mrs. A. Parfitt and Mrs. T. Bowden are in charge of the programme. The association is badly in need of new linen and hopes that there will be a good attendance.

DRAMA FESTIVAL HERE IN APRIL

Plans for Affair to Take Place at Crystal Garden Are Well Advanced

Plans for the British Columbia Drama Festival are progressing rapidly. The dates suggested by the committee have been confirmed, and it is definitely arranged that the Crystal Garden Theatre on April 4, 5, 6 and 7, with a matinee for juvenile teams on April 6. Three plays will be presented by different groups at each performance, and three at the matinee. It is not probable that any play will be repeated, though any club or society is at liberty to present any play they may select, provided it conforms to the time limit set.

Most of the entries and correspondence have been from Vancouver Island, but the last few days have brought a number of inquiries from the Mainland, and especially from Vancouver groups. The Vancouver Little Theatre Association has expressed interest and willingness to co-operate. The executive committee has been enlarged to include representatives of the Victoria Little Theatre Association, the North Saanich Little Theatre Association, the Victoria Theatre Guild (Esquimalt), the Fairfield Players Club, and the Electra Dramatic Society, together with the president and secretary.

The advisory committee includes a representative for each of thirty-three little theatres, societies, clubs, colleges, schools and other groups producing plays in the province. One wholesome sign is that an interest is being aroused in plays by Canadian authors.

As more competing teams are entering than had been anticipated, it will probably be necessary to continue the festival into the following week. The season tickets which the committee proposes to issue at a nominal cost will, however, remain good. His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor has graciously consented to be patron of the festival.

Author Will Not Act in Own Play

LONDON, Jan. 23 (AP).—Susan Glaspell, American author, will not appear in her own play, "Trifles," which is to be presented by the People's National Theatre here next week, she said today. In spite of the removal of the Government's ban against her appearance.

When she was first informed the Government would not permit her to appear on the ground that she would be keeping a British actress out of a job, the play was recast, she declared.

"I'm a writer," she said, "not a professional actress; but it was thought the audience would be interested to see the author in her own play, so I agreed to take the role. The notion that I might be taking work away from some English actress had not occurred to me. I'd rather not act in the play now."

This seemed to end the incident, which found many prominent British critics and authors urging the Government not to prevent her appearance.

Young People's Band Of Salvation Army Will Give Concert

The Young People's Band of the Salvation Army Citadel will give the first concert since their reorganization last Fall, tomorrow night, in the citadel at 8 o'clock.

He was given the oversight of the boy's band ten years ago. The present combination consists of seventeen boys, with an additional five in the learner's class. They played Christmas music in the residential and business districts a few weeks ago, and are pleased to visit institutions or homes where the inmates are unable to attend services or meetings.

LAZY GLANDS
Foul the Scalp!....
If the tiny glands in your scalp are asleep look out! The consequences won't end with just dandruff! It may take a year or more for all the pore-filth to reach the surface.
Scalp scalps that make you turn away in disgust began with "just a little dandruff."
The next commonest sign of gland trouble is when the color of the hair begins to fade, or becomes streaked with gray.
There is only one thing that will ever help heads in this state of stagnation: you must stimulate the tiny glands that feed the hair and give it color. Massage will do this. Use the fingers, dipped in Danderine to cut through that hard crust and penetrate the pores—and do this daily. One treatment will settle the dandruff. One week will find your scalp as clean and wholesome as a little girl's. The second week will have the glands wide-awake and working. That is when your hair begins to live and begins to grow!
Remember, it's massage that does it. And it's Danderine that gets through to the glands. Just rubbing any old thing on the head won't stimulate lazy glands! Go get a bottle of Danderine today, and start your treatments tonight, and see what happens when lazy glands come back to life!

MARTIAL LAW IS MERCILESS

Lawbreaker in Hungary Tried, Sentenced and Hanged in One Day

By JOHN GUNTHER
(Copyright, 1932, by The Chicago Daily News, Inc.)

VIENNA, Jan 23.—Again the new martial law decrees in Hungary have struck with merciless force against a lawbreaker who, under normal circumstances, would have received a much lighter sentence. The victim, Stepan Horvath, was hanged for the murder of a policeman.

Horvath, recently out of jail, was unemployed, hungry and desperate. He was persuaded by two friends to join them in robbery of a food shop, so that, after a week of frantic hunger, they could eat.

They broke into the food shop, seized some cheese and ham, and escaped—into the army of Policeman Josef Simko. Horvath's two companions fled, and he was left struggling with the policeman. The policeman pulled out his revolver; Horvath, battling for his life, wrested it from him and shot, killthe policeman in the confusion.

Horvath was arrested and tried by the special court under Gene Tereki. His defence that he shot by accident was overruled. He claimed that the gun went off when he hit the policeman on the head with its butt, and that he was trying to save his own life in doing so; this was not accepted by the court.

The trial began in midafternoon, three days after the murder; sentence was given at 5:15 the same afternoon, and less than two hours later, at 7:04 p.m., Horvath was hanged. Electric lights illuminated the execution chamber for the second time in Hungary's recent criminal history.

A small boy, leading a donkey, passed an army camp. A couple of soldiers wanted to have some fun with the lad.

"Why are you holding onto your brother so tightly, sonny?" said one of them.

"So that he won't join the army," the youngster replied.

"This passport is false. It says you are bald."

CULBERTSON on CONTRACT

by Ely Culbertson

World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst

MAKING GRAND SLAMS

To bid a grand slam and then to find that the making of it rests upon the taking of a successful finesse is almost a major crime among skillful contract players. The rule laid down in bidding slams and followed by those who play the game with success is that a small slam should be bid when the chances of making it are about even. A grand slam should only be bid, however, when practically every chance of loss has been eliminated through the inferences drawn and information conveyed in the bidding.

The recent Vanderbilt Trophy Cup Contest furnished an example of how Mr. Harold Vanderbilt, who wrote the present scoring laws of the game and who devised his own system of bidding, reached a grand slam contract which was made without difficulty, playing with Mr. Ralph J. Leibenderfer, one of the leading contract players of New York.

North—Dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ A K 7 3 ♡ Q J 8 ◇ A 7 2 ♣ 7 5 2
♠ Q J 8 6 5 4 ♡ 7 6 2 ◇ 9 8 3 ♣ 9	N W E S	♠ 10 2 ♡ 10 9 5 ◇ J 4 ♣ J 10 8 6 4 3
	♠ 9 ♡ A K 4 3 ◇ K Q 10 6 5 ♣ A K Q

The Bidding:

(Figures after bids in table refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

North	East	South	West
1♣(1)	Pass	2◇(2)	Pass
2♠	Pass	3♡(3)	Pass
4◇(4)	Pass	7◇(5)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1. Mr. Vanderbilt and Mr. Leibenderfer were playing the Vanderbilt Club Convention, by which a hand containing more than three honor tricks is shown by a bid of one club, regardless of the bidding in that suit.

2. The two diamond response by South is a strength showing bid. If the hand contained less than two tricks, the conventional answer would be one diamond.

3. South continued the bidding, using the conventional methods of the Culbertson system.

4. Showing values over those disclosed in the opening bid.

5. When North bid four diamonds, Mr. Vanderbilt was certain that the hand contained not only the ace of diamonds, which must be part of the opening bid, but the queen and possibly the knave of hearts as well. He, therefore, bid seven diamonds.

Mr. Leibenderfer held the North hand and Mr. Vanderbilt the South. Of course, a grand slam is made without the taking of a single finesse. It is, therefore, a classic example of a sound grand slam bid. An equally satisfactory result could have been found through the use of the approach-forcing system.

Clubs and Societies

Esquimalt League

Among the recent activities of the Esquimalt Subdivision, Catholic Women's League, held in the Queen of Peace Hall, Esquimalt, were an enjoyable children's party, and an evening card party under the convenership of Mrs. R. A. Duncan, and in aid of the funds of the league. The children's party was attended by about fifty children and many of the parents. Singing, dancing, games and supper were much enjoyed. Rev. Father Wood gave a fine moving picture exhibition of Winter scenes in Eastern Canada, particularly in the vicinity of Ottawa, and the Winter sports were followed with interest and enthusiasm. Mrs. Fagan, president of the subdivision and the committee of members assisted Mrs. Duncan in the arrangements for the afternoon and evening's entertainment. At the card party, which is the second of the series, Mrs. Duga and Miss Olivine Pedneault were winners of the prizes, and following supper a collection of magnificent scenic views in the Canadian Rockies was shown by Rev. Father Wood. The last of this series of card parties will be held on Wednesday.

BEAUX ARTS TO PRESENT SATIRE

"The Mask and the Face" to Be Played at Shrine Hall in March

"The Mask and the Face," a satire in three acts, will be presented by the Beaux Arts for two nights, March 4 and 5, at the Shrine Auditorium.

The play, which will be under the direction of Major Bullock Webster, is an amusing farce, which is said by the critic of The London Sunday Pictorial to be "one of the most perfect comedies of our time." The author, C. B. Fernald, has based his story on "La Maschera e il Volto," by Luigi Chiarelli. The play, as suggested by its derivation, takes place in Italy, and the cast assumes corresponding roles. It fairly sparkles with brilliant satirical dialogue and numerous amusing situations which are capped by the humorously fantastic "funeral scene" in the third act.

The cast is headed by Miss Margaret Watson, as Savina Grazio, and David Denbigh, as Count Mario Grazio, who play the dual lead. Others of the cast are: Miss Marguerite Van Vooght, Miss Daphne Pooley, Miss Mary Martin, Miss Peace Cornwall, Miss Muriel Davenport, Miss Betty O'Brien and Henry Worthington, Denis Humphries, Gilbert Fraser, Roger Humphries, Bill Boorman, Rowland Horsey and Ken Boorman. Most of the players are not newcomers to the stage of Victoria, and will be remembered by local audiences for their performances with the College Players Club, Dramalogue Society and other dramatic organizations. Mondie Christopher is in charge of the scenery.

NEWS AND VIEWS OF OUR VISITORS

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Elliott, of Brooks, Alberta, are staying at the Empress Hotel. Mr. Brooks is superintendent of canals for the C.P.R., and Mayor of Brooks. He and his wife intend spending a holiday in Victoria before proceeding to Seattle, in a week or two, and visiting Vancouver before returning to Alberta.

Mr. Elliott stated that the unemployment situation in his district in Alberta is not as grave as in other parts of the country, and affairs generally are taking an upward trend.

An interesting visitor at the Oak Bay Hotel is James Rimmer, golf professional at Jasper National Park. Mr. Rimmer is spending about six weeks in the city before returning to Jasper to prepare for the Summer season, which starts in May.

Mr. Rimmer declared that the authorities at Jasper expected to have a prosperous season and said that the present rate of exchange should benefit their visitors from the States and thus increase their number.

He also stated that he was playing a great deal of golf while on vacation here, and had played on both Oak Bay and Colwood links.

Mr. and Mrs. Zbinden are spending a few days at the Empress Hotel. Mr. Zbinden is manager of the Seward Hotel in Seattle, and has been associated with that hostelry for more than twenty years. He said that he and Mrs. Zbinden had come to Victoria for a short holiday.

Canadian visitors to Seattle were practically nonexistent, stated Mr. Zbinden, and he maintained that the exchange was wholly responsible for this.

Mr. and Mrs. William Erdman are staying at the Dominion Hotel. Mr. Erdman is from Kent, Washington, where he is engaged in the poultry business. He and his brothers operate a large farm and are doing a flourishing business, stocking as many as 25,000 chickens at a time. Mr. Erdman stated that owing to pressure of business he was unable to take a vacation in the Summer. Last Winter he spent his holidays in Vancouver, and this Winter he decided to give Victoria a trial. He had only been in the city a few hours yet had managed to crowd in several interesting visits and expressed the opinion that Victoria is a very lovely city.

Major Dent Atkinson, a member of the National Republican Committee in the United States, is in the city and is staying at the Dominion Hotel.

Major Atkinson is on a lengthy tour, during which he will visit Panama and Havana. He is connected with the American Army and resides in New York.

FASHION FLASHES

By ALICE ALDEN

Play black and red for an effective evening color scheme. Charming is an ensemble in black chiffon with a red chiffon top embroidered in rhinestones. There is a loose little jacket of the red chiffon also bead embroidered.

Don't forget to include a lace evening frock if you are going South. Charming is a frock in blush pink Spanish lace with a capelet scarf and a cluster of pink and blue chiffon flowers at the waist and securing the scarf.

On Southern sands a girl would look the part in a white linen frock, trimmed with blue and white awning stripe in heavy crash linen. The same striped material makes the accompanying jacket which is of the waistcoat type.

Going to college are several dresses of heavy silk crepe done in tailored style. One smart model in dark blue has a cross-over collar with crystal buttons and long, close-fitting cuffs with little elbow frills.

The camel is so pale that it has gone white for Southern wear. Thus we have a fitted coat of white camel's hair with large white bone buttons marking the double-breasted closing. There are deep butcher's cuffs.

A nice hostess gown is made of lobster red chiffon velvet and has many rows of inverted tucks marking the waistline. The cowl neck is lined with silver lame as are the wide sleeves. There is a short train.

Comfort and Chic Are Combined for Winter

Cleverly Arranged Trimmings and Attention to Color Schemes Feature Styles for Colder Days —Evening Dresses Rely on Materials

Fur trimmings on dresses and coats become daily more elaborate as the crisp cold of Winter makes wrapping up a necessity as well as a fashion, says an article from Paris in The Times. The slim girl wears a brown and red ensemble of woolen crepe with a brown felt hat trimmed at the side with a chou made of narrow strips of brown and red felt. On the shoulders is put a leopard skin cape tied into a bow and ends in front. Gauntlet gloves trimmed with leopard skin go with it, and the belt is in brown suede with a red buckle.

DRESS TRIMMINGS

It is these loose trimmings to dresses and coats which admit of changes in this year's styles. One dress, one coat may have at least two sets of fur and half a dozen scarves. Everywhere you see women wearing bottle or glass green ensembles made of warm woolen materials. They are usually trimmed with black astrakhan or black fox. Black dresses trimmed with green are also worn. At the afternoon opening of a new club last week this fashion was popular.

A Molyneux model is black marocain is trimmed with green glass buttons and a narrow green belt. Colored trimmings on black are invariably slight. Short sleeves on afternoon dresses are right. They are worn with gloves reaching to the elbows, some of which have buttons fastening the glove on the outer side. Black touched with color is practical to wear since it admits of black shoes and black gloves being put with it.

COLOR COUNTS

Two colors which go together are geranium red and beige. A beige dress with a geranium belt may have a hat of geranium red velvet. A brown or black coat goes over the dress. Color is given to many dresses by a yoke or collar and cuffs of crochet in wool, cotton or silk.

Knitted woolen jumpers are only less popular than jumpers in crochet. Hermes and Fauvety both specialize in these things. Hermes has recently made a new jumper in white wool worked with small knobs, or polk dots, of black all over it. In jade green there is the same idea with the knobs concentrated round the neck and wrists to a depth of about an inch and a half Scarves and knitted bonnets (not berets) may be made to match. Bold stripes in knitted jumpers are fashionable, and the same idea is seen in silks with dark dresses.

SMART EVENING FROCKS

Evening dresses are simple in st and rich in materials. The dress with a low-cut back to the bodice is invariably attended by some sort of little shoulder wrap; a cape, a scarf, a coat, a bolero. Worth makes a cowl drapery which may be attached by a bunch of flowers on the left shoulder. Molyneux has lots of little capes, scarves, kerchiefs. So has Lanvin. Necklaces are worn to hang down the back. Dress skirts are long with some fullness round the feet. The shorter dress is worn only by debutantes. Sleeves of some kind are quite right. Mitten sleeves, bertha sleeves, puffed sleeves are all correct, but the sleeveless dress is as fashionable as it ever was. Belts are worn, but the princess dress with no belt is distinguished.

Interest is being shown in a set of hats which are being sent to America under the title "Martha Washington Epoch." Not only the hats worn by this historic lady, but those which were worn by Lafayette and Rochambeau are being used by Paris milliners as models for this series. These hats are tilted forward and a little to one side. They are kinder to the face than the present fashions, which leave so much of the head and brow bare.

6,337 Lamps Needed To Illuminate City During Dark Hours

It requires 6,337 electric lights to illuminate the streets of the city of Victoria, according to figures contained in the annual report of M. Hutchison, city electrician, submitted for information of the members of the City Council.

City lighting is divided in four sections, there being 860 arc lamps, 192, 600-candlepower lamps, 5,210 in clusters and seventy-five in clocks and other forms of outside light.

During 1931 the arc lamps operated for 3,871 hours at a cost of $15,899. Cluster lights were used for 3,893 hours at a cost of $7,000 for power. Maintenance costs amounted to $3,100, which is shared by the owners of property on the streets served. The city operates 300 miles of power lines.

In conjunction with the above report, W. B. McMicking, city wiring inspector, showed his department made 1,565 inspections in Greater Victoria during 1931. The total of fees collected amounted to $2,448.70.

During one performance the mattress into which he had to fall was missing, and he crashed onto the boards.

He was equal to the occasion, however, and, jumping up, exclaimed: "Aha! So the river has frozen."

Wonders of the World

THE COLOSSEUM AT ROME

From whatever point of view it is regarded, the Colosseum is the greatest and most noteworthy of all the relics of ancient Rome.

The actual construction work was completed in A.D. 80. An alternative name for the famous old building is the Flavian amphitheatre, for it was built during the reign of Vespian, Titas and Domitian, three emperors of the family of Flavius.

When the building was first opened, it is a recorded fact that the celebrations lasted 100 days, during which, wild animals were slaughtered and a constant succession of gladiatorial shows were held. One of its amazing qualities is its invulnerability to the forces of decay. It has survived many earthquakes and it did duty for a long time as a fortress and then was used as a quarry from which men took stones for other buildings.

The Colosseum as it stands today measures 615 feet in length, 510 feet in breadth. It could accommodate, it was rumored, 87,000 people. This figure has been discredited, however, but even very careful calculations cannot reduce the number of seats below 45,000 at least. It was furnished with seats of marble and the length of each was marked out by grooves cut in the stone. The outer wall of the Colosseum, 157 feet in height, was built of stone and was divided into four stories. The building is elliptical in shape and measures 1,648 feet in circumference.

EIGHTY ARCADES

Eighty arcades pierced each of the three lower stories. The top story was of solid masonry, broken only by forty small windows to admit light and air to the passages surrounding the building.

A wall so smoothly built that no wild animal could scale it separated the arena from the grandstands or "cavea," where the spectators sat. The arena of the Colosseum was so designed that it could quickly be flooded so that the galleys could be floated in it for combats on the water.

A remarkable series of passages and chambers from which, by means of movable platforms, gladiators and wild animals could be raised through trapdoors into the middle of the vast arena, is to be found in the building.

The proceedings at the Colosseum were opened by a procession of gladiators. Then came the testing of the weapons by the promoters of the show. If one of the gladiators wanted mercy after being injured, he would extend a forefinger. It was for the spectators to grant or refuse his appeal. If they turned their thumbs down, the gladiator was killed by his opponent. If they pointed their fingers to their breasts, he would be spared.

RECRUITED SLAVES

The gladiators were recruited from the ranks of slaves and criminals, reprieved from sentence of death. They were schooled in the art of fighting by special instructors and were subjected to a rigorous and terrible discipline. The contestants sometimes had to be forced into the ring with whips, but the majority learned to die like men.

The destruction of Christian and political heretics in the Colosseum by the most revolting methods gave endowed the place with a most sinister reputation which has proved valuable to poets and artists alike.

After many centuries it still stands, recalling to mind the old saying:

"While stands the Colosseum Rome shall stand,
When falls the Colosseum Rome shall fall,
And when Rome falls, the world."

TOWN FAMOUS OF SHOEMAKER

By JOHN GUNTHER

(Chicago Daily News Foreign Service. Copyright, 1932.)

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia, Jan. 23.—Up in the northerly town of Zlin there is a man named Tomas Bata, and no story about Czechoslovakia is complete without reference to him. Mr. Bata makes shoes. He makes more shoes than anyone else in the world.

Three thousand souls was the population of Zlin before the war. Now it is upwards of 30,000, of whom 20,000 are Mr. Bata's workmen. They must be hard-working fellows, because Bata's total output is the stupendous total of 120,000 to 145,000 pairs of shoes per day.

I asked someone where Mr. Bata got his leather.

"It depends on the sky," was the reply.

OWNS FLEET OF PLANES

Mr. Bata, in other words, owns fifteen airplanes, which he uses as leather scouts. His own pilots, with his dealers, roam Europe's leather markets, swooping down whenever it is time to buy. Mr. Bata wanted also to buy the R-100, the British dirigible recently scrapped, but the deal fell through.

Bata owns his own wagon-lits and runs buyers of his shoes by express trains from Vienna, Prague and Berlin. He plans to build in Zlin what will be the biggest, swellest hotel in Central Europe. He owns retail stores all over Czechoslovakia and in many other European countries. He exported something over 5,000,000 pairs of shoes to the United States last year.

Mr. Bata is about fifty; runs his business in company with a younger brother. He was a shoemaker himself by trade and went to America to learn mass-production methods. His development has been extraordinarily rapid. He has done a good deal for his workmen and pays the highest wages in Czechoslovakia, perhaps in all Central Europe.

SMALL THINGS EXPORTED

Bata's methods are typical, despite the recent depression, of the phenomenal industrial wealth of Czechoslovakio. They typify the Czech genius for superlative success in the sale of small things. The country has heavy industry, and plenty of it; but to the man in the street Czech goods are symbolized by the never-ending stream leaving the country of essentially small things—toys, gloves, buttons, ammunition, clips, pottery, glassware, beads, hams, paper, dresses, hardware, yarn, sugar, hooks and eyes.

And one should not forget the beer—the noblest on earth. Out of the Pilsen breweries alone pours a golden flood of about 130,000,000 quarts a year.

The problems of purely internal politics in Czechoslovakia demand a word, if only because they are so essentially stable in comparison, say, with the politics of Rumania or Austria. A very wide coalition, comprising eight parties, forms the Government, and, with occasional shifts, this coalition has been in power snce 1925. It is significant of the happy security of domestic politics that scarcely anyone outside Czechoslovakia has ever heard the name of the Prime Minister, Frantisek Udrzal. I heard him described as an amiable but unimportant gentleman who held his job mainly because he had few enemies.

LOCAL POLITICS COMPLEX

Let one not think, however, that Czechoslovak local politics is not complicated. There are at least seventeen different parties in the Parliament—count 'em! No one has yet succeeded in explaining to me the difference between most of them.

The strongest party is the Czech agrarian, led by Dr. Svehla, often talked about as the next President when Masaryk dies. Dr. Benes' party is the Czechoslovak National Socialist, which, despite its name, is not to be confused with such National Socialists as those of Hitler in Germany.

Czechoslovak Agrarians	45
Czechoslovak Social Democrats	29
Czechoslovak National Socialists	29
Czechoslovak Catholics	31
Czechoslovak National Democrats	13
Czechoslovak Small Traders	13
German Agrarians	16
German Social Democrats	17

The Slovak autonomy party, with twenty-three seats (489,000 votes), and the Communists, the second largest party, with forty-one seats (933,000 votes), are left out of the Coalition Government, as are dissident Magyar, Polish and Jewish elements.

CHAPTER XVII

In Lady Vera's flat in Davies Street, Mayfair, Ann, at the time when this conversation was taking place, had paused in the writing of her letters to have one of her heart to heart talks with her Conscience. Ever since the night of the Bassinger Ball at the Hotel Mazarin, this incubus had been making itself more than ordinarily obnoxious.

"Tired?" asked Conscience, with affected solicitude.

"No."

"Then why have you stopped writing. To think, perhaps? To muse, maybe? About that affair at the Mazarin, possibly?"

"Well, why shouldn't I?"

"A pretty disgraceful affair, that," said Conscience with growing severity. "A very shady bit of work indeed. I wonder you don't try to forget it. I suppose you realize that if Toddy Malling hadn't come along at that particular moment that man would have kissed you?"

"Would he?"

"You know he would. And you would have liked it, too. That's the part that sickens me. That's the aspect of the matter that—"

"All right," said Ann shortly.

Conscience was not to be silenced.

"A nice girl like you! A girl who has always prided herself on her fastidiousness. A girl who could never understand how other girls in her set could make themselves cheap and let themselves be pawed about . . . Ugh!" said Conscience with-eringly. "Necker!"

Ann shuddered.

"Yes! Necker! And you engaged to a delightful young man, heir to one of the finest titles in England. And a young man, what is more, who is at this very instant writhing on a bed of pain, his only consolation the thought of you."

"But he's got mumps."

"What of it?"

There was a pause.

"And this other man," resumed Conscience. "What do you know about him? Coming right down to it, how do you know he's worthy of you?"

"He must be, with a face like that."

"Statistics show that fifty per cent of murderers and other criminals have pleasing faces. You can't go by the face."

"Romantic! That's the trouble with you," said Conscience, snatching at the point. "Do you know what you are? A silly, sentimental schoolgirl. Isn't it romantic enough for you to be the future Countess of Hoddesdon? I'm ashamed of you."

"I've got to get on with my letters," said Ann.

She resumed her task. All these idiotic people writing to wish her happiness when they ought to have known that marrying Lord Biskerton wasn't going to make her—She checked herself sternly. It was just this kind of reflection which had caused Conscience to maltreat her so much in the last few days.

"Dear Lady Corstorphine," she wrote doggedly, "How sweet of you to—"

"Oh, gosh!" said Ann.

She laid down her pen. She simply couldn't.

"?" said Conscience.

"Oh, all right," said Ann.

She worked off the Corstorphine one. Then she picked up the next in order from the pile.

Castlewood,
Mulberry Grove,
Valley Fields, S.E., 21

Dear Ann:

I suppose you have quite forgotten me . . .

Ann looked at the signature.

K. Valentine.

A sensation that was like poignant nostalgia swept over Ann Moon. Kitchie Valentine! The girl who had been such fun on the boat, coming over from America—such ages ago. Ann stated guiltily. She was a girl who formed friendships with the eager impulsiveness of a kitten, and she had loved Kitchie. When they had parted at Waterloo Station they had vowed to have all sorts of good times together . . .

And here she had been in England weeks and weeks and weeks and had never once given Kitchie a thought.

Reading the letter did nothing to heal her remorse. Poor Kitchie! She seemed to be having a wretched time. This uncle of hers might have been the life and soul of the officers' mess of the Royal Loyal Worcestershires, but he was evidently proving a poor companion for a young girl. True, there was some mention of a man next door, a Mr. Smith, who appeared to be agreeable; but there was very little about him and a great deal about the absent Merwyn Flock. Merwyn, it seemed, had not written for nearly a month.

Ann put down her pen. She glowed with altruistic fervor. This letter, happening to coincide with the first free evening she had had for a considerable time, decided her. Her two-seater was garaged just round the corner. Ten minutes later she was on the way to Valley Fields. Half an hour later she had pulled up outside Castlewood. Thirty-two minutes later she was being informed that Miss Valentine was not at home. She had gone to the pictures with Mr. Smith from Peacehaven.

"Oh?" Well, tell her I called."

Ann could not help feeling a little annoyed. She knew that she ought not to be grudging Kitchie any simple pleasure she might be able to snatch from life, but her relief expedition had undeniably fallen somewhat flat.

The gleam of water across the road caught her eye. She walked to the railings and stood looking at the swans. They had little to offer her in the way of entertainment. Twilight was falling on Mulberry Grove, and Egbert and Percy had turned in for the night. Each was floating with his head tucked under the left wing. Ann turned away, and, doing so, was aware that her sylvan solitude had been invaded. Over the gate of the house named the Nook a young man was leaning. The smoke of his tobacco floated up toward the smiling sky.

Ann started to walk to her car. She had scarcely passed the young man when he uttered the word "Gosh!" in a loud and startled voice. And almost simultaneously the gate slammed, and he was at her side.

She stopped. She turned. She arranged her features for a withering look—a look which would say "Sir!" even if she did not say it.

She gave a little gasp. She stared. The withering look went all to pieces and in its place there appeared one of blank astonishment.

"Oh!" said Ann sharply.

Berry Conway had come out of the Nook to lean on his gate and smoke in no idle spirit of dolce far niente. It was not the mere beauty of the summer evening that had drawn him thither. He had come because the Od Retainer had been weeping on his neck indoors and seemed likely, if he remained, to go on weeping indefinitely.

It was immediately on his return from the city that he had first perceived that this woman was not her old, placid self. She appeared to be in the grip of some powerful, though at the moment suppressed, emotion. She sniffed once or twice. And as he went upstairs to change his clothes he could feel her eyes fixed on his back in a stare like that of some dumb animal trying to express itself.

This was at six-thirty. Descending the stairs at six-forty-five, he found her waiting in the hall. There could be no doubt now that something momentous had occurred.

At six-fifty it had all come out. Sergeant Finbow until that morning Police Constable Finbow, had celebrated his promotion by making her an offer of marriage.

At seven-fifteen she was still saying that she would not dream of deserting Master Berry. At seven-twenty, arguing forcibly, Berry had begun to try to convince her that, even lacking her protective care, he would manage to get along somehow. At seven-thirty the weeping had set in. And at seven-thirty-five he had broken from the clinch, lit his pipe, and come out to lean on the gate and adjust his mind to this extraordinary piece of good fortune.

With the Old Retainer satisfactorily settled and off his mind, he could at least begin to come to terms with this business of life. She had always been the great obstacle. The future now opened out before him, rich and splendid. No more Nook. No more Frisby. He could start fair, with the world as his oyster and an intense and all-conquering determination as his oyster fork.

He leaned on the gate, planning great things. There was a girl across the road inspecting the swans. The sight of her turned his thoughts to their favorite theme, and for some moments a mist hid Mulberry Grove and the rest of the world from his sight.

It cleared away, and he saw that the girl was coming towards him.

Ann was the first to speak. She was still feeling a little breathless. She had just become a convert to the doctrine of Predestination, and was finding the experience somewhat overwhelming. It was, she realized, evidently Fate's intention that, wherever she might happen to be, this young man should materialize out of thin air at her side, so there was nothing to be done about it. Conscience could not blame her for what was Fate's fault.

She spoke with a childlike wonder.

"Is there any place where you aren't?" she said.

Berry continued to stare. The idea of Predestination had not yet occurred to him.

"Is it really you?" she said.

Ann said it was.

"Well, I suppose all this is happening," said Berry, "but I can't believe it. What . . .?"

"What . . .?" said Ann simultaneously.

"I was going to say, 'What are you doing here?'"

"So was I. I came to see a friend who lives here."

Ann paused, trying to assimilate an idea. "Do you live here?" she asked, surprised.

Berry would have given much to deny it. He glowed with shame for Mulberry Grove. Beastly smug, placid, prosaic place. Black Joe's opium dive in Deptford was the only fitting address for the man he would have liked to be.

"Yes," he admitted.

"Yes," she admitted.

"But why?"

Berry was frank about it.

"They don't pay us much in the secret service," he said.

"Oh, well!" said Berry.

There was another pause.

"What—" said Ann.

"What—" said Berry.

"I beg your pardon," said Berry.

"Go on," said Ann.

"No, you go on," said Berry.

"What became of you the other night? At the dance?"

"I was ejected by a man with a walrus moustache who seemed to be someone in authority."

"That was Sir Herbert Bassing, your host.

"Not mine."

Ann's eyes widened.

"Do you mean to say you were not invited?"

"Only to get out."

"But why . . .?"

"To see you, of course."

"Oh!" said Ann.

"I was in the lobby. I saw you getting into the lift."

"The elevator?"

"The elevator," said Berry, accepting the emendation. "They told me there was a dance going on upstairs, so I went up."

Gilbert Hall Wins Canadian Indoor Net Championship

South Orange Star Defeats Berkley Bell in Straight Sets, 6-1, 7-5, 6-1—Teams With Fritz Mercur to Capture Doubles Crown

MONTREAL, Jan. 23 (CP).—A smashing service and spectacular play gave J. Gilbert Hall, of South Orange, N.J., a straight-set victory over Berkley Bell, of Austin, Texas, here this afternoon, enabling the New Jersey stylist to regain the Canadian covered court tennis singles title he held in 1929. Hall played a magnificent game to conquer the tall Texan in the final, the scores being 6-1, 7-6, 6-1.

George M. Lott, of Chicago, the defending champion, was eliminated by Gilbert Hall in the semi-finals, while Berkley Bell defeated Marcel Rainville, of Montreal, Canadian Davis Cup star.

Bell went into the final here today with one arm bandaged, presumably the result of an accident yesterday, when he ran into a lineman's chair while playing Rainville. His injuries had little effect on his game, however, and he put up a good fight against the new champion.

Hall's service was hard and effective, and gained him many points. His spectacular play drew cheers of admiration from a large gallery. He returned nearly every shot that the Texan sent his way, and covered the court with surprising agility. Bell staged a rally after dropping the first set, 1-6, but Hall's steady playing and clever returns proved too formidable. Hall ran out the third set quickly and the title was his.

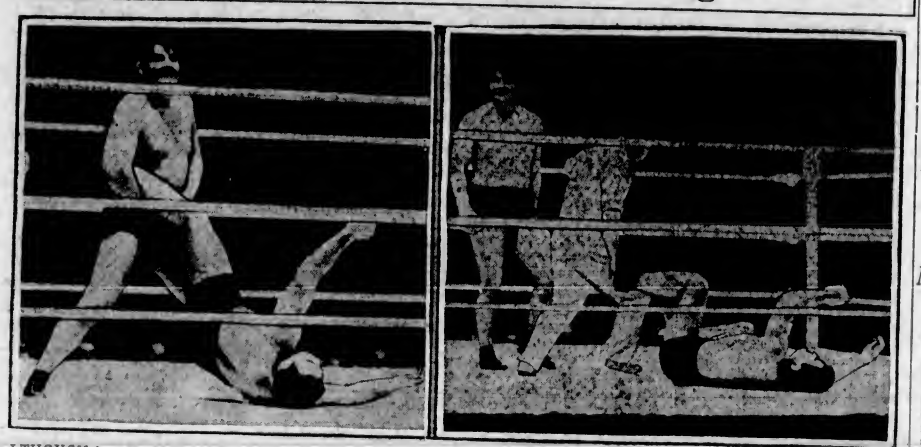
HALL, MERCUR WIN

A decisive straight-set victory gave J. Gilbert Hall, of South Orange, N.J., and Fritz Mercur, of Bethlehem, Pa., the doubles championship. Hall, who won the Canadian singles title immediately before, paired with Mercur to beat George M. Lott, of Chicago, and Marcel Rainville, of Montreal, 6-4, 6-3, 6-3.

Hall and Mercur gave an impressive display of tennis to down Lott, defending singles champion, and Rainville, Canadian star and member of Canada's Davis Cup team. Still showing the powerful style that gave him the singles title with a straight-set triumph over Berkeley Bell, of Austin, Texas, only a few minutes before. Hall started the doubles final at a fast clip. Rainville and Lott were at their best in the first set and won four games, but Mercur and his stylish partner halted them effectively with smart placements and tricky services, and swept to victory in the next two sets, 6-3, 6-2.

The doubles match concluded the championship tourney which was in progress throughout the week at the courts of the Montreal Indoor Tennis Club.

Hefty Maulers Go to Mat in Big Fixture



ALTHOUGH he resembled the Venus de Milo more than a "Greek Adonis" as he entered the ring with his right arm in bandages and his features marred, Jim Londos, heavyweight wrestling prestidigitateur, proved to the 13,347 cash customers of the Gardens in Toronto that men like George Zaharias are "just his meat." Zaharias, accepted as the "bad man" of wrestling, appeared amazed as he heard the vast gathering pull for him to do "this and that" to his mild-mannered compatriot. In fact, George for the major part of the evening was a most docile "one beeg ride," while in the second, George, after he and his opponent had parted company, is seen looking askance at someone who passed a rude remark. That contact with the resin evidently gave Mr. Londos a headache.

Montreal Maroons and Chicago Black Hawks Battle to 3-3 Tie

TORONTO, Jan. 23 (CP).—Oncoming rush of Montreal Canadiens in the National Hockey League race was staved off tonight by Toronto's circuit-leading Maple Leafs. Leafs went into a five-point lead in the Canadian section, defeating the second place Canadiens, 2-0.

Joe Primeau, lean centre for Leafs, scored the first goal as the opening period waned and Frankie Finnegan, relief wing, notched the other in the game's last minute. Both goals came on system-plays. Primeau tallied on Harvey Jackson's rebound and Finnegan slapped his goal into the net after passes from Primeau and Jackson.

At the start of the game, Jackson barely missed the corner on Hap Day's pass. After Primeau scored, Goalie Chabot saved from Johnny Gagnon and Wildor Larochelle. Horner was given a major penalty for bundling Hainsworth and the puck into the net as the goalie held Bob Gracie's drive.

Canadiens opened the second period with a wild fight for the equalizer, but while Pete Lepine was off for a minor penalty their play slowed down. Harold Cotton hit the post on a play with Finnegan. For a too-heavy hip, Horner was penalized again, but Canadiens failed to capitalize his absence. After Charlie Conacher rapped the post, Pete Lepine came back to force Chabot to a brilliant save. Howie Morenz was in on the net in a lone rush but shot wide. Cautiously Canadiens watched for openings in the third period, while Leafs toiled and Conacher twice came near scoring. Finnegan's goal came after Canadiens had forced Chabot to a series of spectacular saves in the wild closing minutes. Line-ups:

Summary

Third period—2, Toronto, Finnegan (Primeau), Jackson, 19:23.

MAROONS IN DRAW

FORUM, MONTREAL, Jan. 23 (CP).—Three goals in the last eight minutes of play gave Montreal Maroons a 3-3 tie with the Chicago Black Hawks in a National Hockey League game here tonight. An overtime period failed to break the tie. The game was a personal triumph for Chuck Gardiner, net custodian for the Hawks. Chuck cheated the Montrealers out of many scoring chances, and got as much work as any forward on the ice. His cool, canny work was the bright spot in a slow game.

The Maroons presented a weak defence and general hastiness around the enemy nets. Their attacks failed to click until the game was almost over. They had an edge throughout the game on territorial play, but their faulty passing and shooting and Chuck Gardiner's brilliance kept them out of the scoring column till Chuck was all in.

The Hawks scored in the first when Paul Thompson skated down the wing and picked up Lowrey's pass for a nice snipeshot into the corner of the net. In the second period Lola Couture split the Starr-Siebert defence with ease and beat Normie Smith from close in. Paul Thompson scored his second goal along in the third period, scooting down the boards with all the Maroons at the Chicago end of the ice. His high shot, coming from an angle, was too much for Norm Smith. The Maroons finally beat Gardiner in the last eight minutes. Hooley Smith counted the first on Brydson's pass. Brydson got one from close-in assists from Stewart and Siebert, and Davie Trottier tied the score with a shot from a scramble on Babe Siebert's pass. Line-ups:

Chicago — Gardiner; Wentworth, Boucher; Ripley, Couture, Shea; subs, Abel, March, Thomson, Lowrey, Holmes, Cook, Graham, Ingram.

Montreal Maroons — N. Smith; Conacher, Wilcox; Stewart, Brydson, Trottier; subs, Starr, Ward, Siebert, R. Smith, Robinson, McVicar, Phillips, Northcott.

Referees — Cooper Smeaton and Jack Cameron.

Summary

Second period—2, Chicago, Couture, 14:34. Penalties: Marsh, Conacher, Holmes.

Third period—3, Chicago, Thomson, 6:13; 4, Maroons, Smith (Brydson), 6:37; 5, Maroons, Brydson (Stewart and Siebert), 1:25; 6, Maroons, Trottier (Siebert), 3:46. Penalties: Siebert, Ripley, Ingram, Stewart, Graham.

Overtime—No score.

FALCONS BLANK BRUINS

BOSTON, Jan. 23 (AP).—After dropping seventeen games here during the past five seasons, the Detroit Falcons turned savagely on the Boston Bruins tonight and buried them deeper in the American section cellar with a 2-0 victory. The Falcons, in gaining their first win on Boston ice since they entered the National League back in 1926, scored in the opening and last periods on their opponents' miscues. The Bruins were over-anxious during all of the action, and were so keyed up that they blundered repeatedly.

Frank Carson quit the penalty box early in the first period in time to get his stick on a flying puck and trap all of his opponents outside their zone. He swept in close to the Boston net and slammed home the opening tally.

During the second and third sessions the Bruins packed the Falcons' territory, but their many power plays produced but two scoring chances, which Cooney Weiland bungled. Larry Aurie scored the second goal after he slammed the puck out of a scrimmage near his net. He came up fast and, when the rubber bounced over George Owen's stick, he gained it with a wild burst of speed and rammed it into "Tiny" Thompson's cage.

Eddie Shore was the only Bostonian playing his usual game. This aggressive defence star bore the brunt of the Bruins' attack during the first two periods, and was too weary to be of much assistance during the late stages.

Alex Smith and Reg Noble crushed the Bruins' massed attack with ease, and their forwards, in checking back with surprising speed, were always on the scene in time to clear the puck from the vicinity of their net. Line-ups:

Boston Bruins—Thompson; Shore, Hitchman; Weiland; Clapper, Cook; subs, Barry, Oliver, Touhey, Chapman, Burge, Galbraith, Owen, Foster.

Summary

First period — 1, Detroit, Carson (unassisted), 7:27. Penalties: Carson, Smith.

Second period—No scoring. Penalties: Chapman, Emms, Burke.

Third period — 2, Detroit, Aurie (unassisted), 14:29.

ROYALS DOWN SAINTS AFTER FINE DISPLAY

Dominion Soccer Champions Show Great Form in 3-2 Victory

COULTER SCORES PAIR OF GOALS

VANCOUVER, Jan. 23.—Adapting themselves better to a ground, which was frozen underneath and flooded on the surface, Westminster Royals gave a grand exhibition of soccer at Con Jones Park this afternoon, to beat St. Andrews, 3-2, and increase their lead to seven points in the Coast League standings. It was the Scots' first defeat in the last six starts, and, but for a magnificent display in goal by Rabbitt, and at left fullback by Daisy Waugh, the Dominion charapions would have won by a much wider margin.

Rabbitt received an ovation at the interval, and he well deserved it, for he alone had prevented the Royals from scoring up to that time. Waugh had to play left back when McGibbin hurt his leg badly and had to go off.

KERR OPENS SCORE

Kerr scored the Royals' first goal ten minutes after half-time, but Cy Johnson headed a magnificent equalizer two minutes later. Then a wonderful piece of combination by the Royals' forward line brought a terrific shot from Coulter, which Rabbit stopped in marvelous fashion on the line only for Turner to dash up and drive it into the net. Five minutes' later Todd's shot was going wide when it hit Coulter's legs and stopped conveniently for the centre to bang it past Rabbitt. Five minutes from the end Stephen met a perfect centre from Boyd and booted the ball past D'Easum. Babcock had an off day and missed several gilt-edged chances, while Nestman neglected a couple in the first half.

Postponed Feat As Light Too Bad For Photography

PARIS, Jan. 23 (CP).—Captain George Smyth, adventurous Canadian, postponed the feat of diving from the Concorde Bridge into the River Seine today. Large numbers of camera men who had gathered for the spectacle, urged Smyth to postpone the attempt on account of the poor light caused by cloudy skies. He will probably make an attempt next Monday or Tuesday.

FROZEN GROUNDS FORCES HALT IN VANCOUVER RUGBY

VANCOUVER, Jan. 23.—For the second week in succession all Miller Cup and intermediate Rugby games were called off today. Last Saturday it was a case of snow, but the hard frost of last night made playing dangerous today.

Ground Conditions Cause Cancellation Of Rugby Fixtures

DUE to the heavy frost over Friday night, the two senior Rugby fixtures and two of the intermediate games carded yesterday afternoon were canceled owing to the hard condition of the grounds. After inspecting the pitches, the various referees came to the conclusion that they were dangerous and would not allow the teams to take the field.

"Tiger" Daula Wins From Axel Anderson Before Packed House

Giant Hindu Pins Seattle Matman With Ease in Main Event—Bout Ends in Straight Falls —Brooks in Great Victory

Toying with his opponent during the first two rounds, "Tiger" Daula, giant Hindu wrestler from India, defeated Axel Anderson, Seattle, in the main event of last night's grappling card at the Tillicum gym, in straight falls, the first coming in the third and the second thirty seconds after the start of the fourth. Gaining the only fall in the final canto, "Rocky" Brooks, Victoria, scored a sweet victory over Dr. Milliken, Los Angeles, in the five-round semi-wind-up. The largest crowd for many months sat in at the bouts. Officials were forced to turn many customers away.

Intermingled in the crowd were many Hindus, some of them with their wives and families. Daula entered the ring wearing a red turban and a silver necklace, and was given a great ovation by the crowd. After instructions by Referee Richardson, Daula discarded his turban but wore the necklace in the ring. The Hindu stood in the middle of the ring waiting for Anderson as the gong sounded for the first round. Both took things easy in the first few minutes. Anderson applied several holds but the "Tiger" slipped from them with the ease of a champion.

"TIGER" OPENS UP

Daula opened the second round with a strong scissors. Anderson managed to get a toehold but the Hindu took his time and broke it easily. Applying body slams and rabbit punches, the "Tiger" had Anderson in a bad way as the second round ended. Three minutes after the beginning of the third, Daula gained the first fall with a series of headlocks and body slams. Using a hard body slam thirty seconds after the fourth got under way, Daula took the second fall and the match.

GREAT VICTORY

Clamping on a backward body slam with lightning speed, "Rocky" Brooks pinned the visiting medico from Los Angeles in the final round after a bout packed full of action. Dr. Milliken had one fault the fans did not like: he talked too much when he had Brooks in a bad way. The first round was pretty even, with both lads sizing each other up. Brooks was forced through the ropes in the second to protect himself as his opponent aimed kicks at him from all angles. Milliken got mad at the referee for some reason or other and wanted to take him on, but all he got was a good talking to for his antics.

Brooks had the best of the third and fourth rounds and had Milliken running to the ropes several times. In the fourth Milliken had a hard time eluding headlocks and was beginning to show the effects as the round ended. Milliken opened the last round with five successive body slams. Then the local lad threw the doctor to the mat with plenty of force with a backward body slam, to get the verdict after 1 min. 50 secs.

ESQUIMALT AND THISTLES WIN SOCCER FIXTURES

Esquimalt Drives In Four Goals in Opening Half to Score 4-3 Win on Mud-Covered Field—Jokers' Rally Falls Short in Second Session—Watt Scores Twice

Suburbanites Blank Opponents, 3-0

LEAGUE STANDING
(Second Half)

	W.	L.	D.	F.	A.	P.
Saanich Thistles	2	0	0	10	1	4
Esquimalt	2	0	0	7	3	4
Jokers	0	1	0	3	4	0
Victoria West	0	1	0	1	7	0
Victoria City	0	2	0	0	6	0

Coming through with victories over their opponents yesterday afternoon, Saanich Thistles and Esquimalt, first half winners, kept neck and neck in the race for the second half championship of the First Division of the Victoria and District Football League. The suburbanites blanked Victoria City at Heywood Avenue grounds, 3-0, while the dockers flashed fine combination in the opening half to take a 4-3 decision from Jokers on the lower Beacon Hill pitch.

Both grounds were in sloppy conditions, but the teams displayed good soccer at times, despite the disadvantage they were forced to face. Esquimalt got the jump on the Jokers in the initial canto and ran in four goals before the intermission. The Jokers had the better of the play in the last half, but failed to get home the equalizer. Saanich proved to be better "mudders" than the City and, as a result, came through with a shutout victory.

Kicking up the slope and with the sun in their faces, Esquimalt's machine started on the offensive, and it wasn't long before Gordie Chalmers, Jokers' goalie, was called upon to stop several hard drives from the toes of the dockers' front rank. He was guarding a net with at least six inches of mud covering the goalmouth, which made the task all the more difficult. "Barney" Barnswell, the lad who drove in the winning goal last week against the Jokers in the Province Cup match, opened the scoring when he smashed in a hard drive on a pass from Mike Wagland. Chalmers got his hands on the ball, but it slipped through into the net.

WOODLEY EQUALIZES

Less than five minutes later, Jack Woodley, left winger, sent home the equalizer with a terrific shot from close quarters. Archie Campbell sent over the cross which De Costa tried to intercept, but missed, and Woodley made no mistake as the Esquimalt goalie was sprawled in the mid in front of his net. From the kick-off, the dockers swept down the field and "Scotty" Stewart tricked his way in close to the penalty area and scored in the corner of the net, well out of Chalmers' reach.

Still playing beautiful combination and having by far the best of the game, Esquimalt went further in the lead when John Watt scored, following a well engineered forward attack, in which "Scotty" Stewart, Bob Stewart, Williams and Watt figured. The dockers continued to add pressure and John Watt made the score 4-1 just before the rest period with a hard drive to the corner from close quarters.

The teams played ragged football for the opening minutes of the second half. Esquimalt never extended themselves on the offensive as they were satisfied with their three-goal lead. After about twenty minutes of somewhat mediocre soccer, Jokers started to press and kept up their tactics until the final whistle. Harold Sage put some life in the game by tricking his way through and beating the Esquimalt goalie with a rifle shot to the top of the rigging. Minutes later, the Jokers were awarded a penalty when Pepin accidentally handled the ball in the restricted area. Bob Preston made a poor attempt at scoring, his smothered shot going wide of the goal.

MISSES PENALTY

Not long after Preston missed the spot shot, Jock McBay made things interesting by heading home a cross from Dickie Bond for the Jokers' third goal. With time fleeing, the losers pressed hard for the equalizer but their efforts were halted with the sounding of the final whistle. In the final session, Jokers put Harold Sage on left wing in place of Woodley, who was injured in the first half.

Woodley refereed and the teams follow:

SAANICH THISTLES WIN

The Saanich-City encounter proved a rather slow match for the fans to watch, despite the fact that both teams fought hard to finish, the soggy ground, which in places was a sea of mud, being too much for players on both sides. Throughout the game play was fairly even, with the Thistles playing a little more on the offensive than their opponents.

When the game opened players found great difficulty in controlling the slippery ball, and consequently took some time to settle down to organized play. When about fifteen minutes of the first half had ticked away, the suburbanites began to show slight superiority, and ten minutes later, on a forward rush, Gibbons, inside left, drove in the neatest goal of the day from near the penalty line, after dribbling through the City backs, to give Saanich a one-goal lead.

CITY PRESSES

This counter seemed to bring the City eleven to life and for the next few minutes of play they peppered Bridges, Saanich goalie, with shots from all angles. No score was forthcoming, however, as time and time again, the Saanich backs cleared. The half ended with play in midfield and the score still 1-0 for the Thistles.

The second half was featured by a number of close calls for both goalies, as they experienced great difficulty in handling the slippery ball. On several occasions the Victoria forwards broke through to have practically an open goal before them, and then kicked wide or high.

No score came in the second stanza until the game was more than three-quarters spent.

SPELLAR SCORES

Saanich's second tally came from the boot of Alex Spellar, left half, when he kicked from well outside the penalty area. Burns, Saanich centre forward, who was close in on the goal, made an attempt to head the ball into the net, but changed his mind and ducked his head. Farquhar, City goalie, was prepared to take the ball from Burns, and when the latter changed his mind, the leather landed at Farquhar's feet, passing between his legs and into the goal.

THE TEAMS

Saunders handled the whistle and the teams were:

Saanich Thistles—Bridges, Essler, Harper, Williams, Joe Crowe, Spellar, Viggers, Price, Burns, Gibbons and Armitage.

Shock Team of First-Class Scottish Soccer

SINCE their re-entry into first class soccer in Scotland at the opening of the present season, from whence they were relegated to the Second Division some years ago, Third Lanark Football Club have made their presence felt. They occupy a contending position in the league table, being fourth to Motherwell, and nothing would satisfy the Cathkin Park band than to emulate their feat of 1904, when they won the league championship. In the first round of the Scottish Cup competition, the team met stubborn opposition in "Bully Wee" Clyde, and lost 4-0. Experts Skeptical About $1,000,000 Fight Gate

Max Schmeling-Jack Sharkey Bout Expected to Draw Around $600,000—Rates for Top-Price Tickets Will Not Be Reduced

NEW YORK, Jan. 23 (AP)—With Max Schmeling on the high seas bound for Germany, and Jack Sharkey on the high road to Boston, Father Knickerbocker's faithful started guessing today the cost of the heavyweight pair's next formal appearance here, June 16.

They will fight then for the heavyweight championship, held by Schmeling since June 12, 1930, because Sharkey, in a fit of wildness in the fourth round, planked the Teuton low after bewildering him with face punches up to the final moment. That fiasco, visited upon $749,934.65 worth of customers, numbering 79,222, brought several radical changes in the general scheme of fight things.

For one thing it ended abruptly boxing's golden area, brought in by Jack Dempsey, prolonged while Gene Tunney acquired his millions and lasting just long enough for Schmeling and Sharkey to sweep up what was left of the boom days. When Bill Stribling faced the Teuton in Cleveland last Summer there was a scant $350,000 in the box office.

INTEREST INCREASING

If the present revival of Winter boxing interest at Madison Square Garden is any indication, the "faithful" may support the next Sharkey-Schmeling engagement in unexpected numbers. The last two fight shows at the house that Tex Rickard built have been close to capacity, with the Hamas-Loughran and Petrolle-Ran bouts as features.

Jimmy Johnston, new Garden promoter, is talking glibly of a revival of the $1,000,000 gate when Sharkey gets his chance for revenge, two years delayed. Instead of rate cutting, that means a top price charge of at least $25 for tickets, exclusive of State and Federal taxes amounting to 30 per cent, a daring experiment in these times.

The more conservative, taking everything into consideration, scarcely can see where a gate of more than $600,000 can come from, despite the increased attractiveness of the match.

TWO ARE TIED IN ARIZONA OPEN

Kaffoon and Guldahl Bracketed at Half-Way Mark With 141—Sarazen Well Up

PHOENIX, Ariz., Jan. 23 (AP).—Cy Kaffoon, Denver pro, stroked his way into a tie lead with Ralph Guldahl, professional from Detroit, at the half-way mark today of the Arizona Open golf tournament. They ended the thirty-six holes with scores of 141, three under par. The sensation of the day was furnished by Paul Runyan, of New York, who made a hole-in-one on the 228-yard seventeenth.

Neither Kaffoon nor Guldahl were low for today's eighteen holes, that honor going to Archie Hambrick, of Zanesville, Ohio, who turned in a 69, three strokes under par.

The Colorado pro shot an eagle and two birdies to register 33 for the first nine holes, and a 38 on the last nine for 71. Guldahl, who led the field yesterday with a sensational 67 over the par 72 course, required a 74 today. Gene Sarazen and Wiffy Cox continued their bitter battle, each scoring 74 and bringing their total to 146 each.

MOST THRILLS PROVIDED BY JACK DEMPSEY

FOOTBALL VOTED GREATEST SPORT

NEW YORK, Jan. 23 (AP).—If it is any encouragement to him as he considers a fighting comeback after a lapse of five years, Jack Dempsey may know, here and now, that he has furnished the country's newspaper experts with more thrills than any other athlete.

This goes, says the ballots in the Associated Press poll, despite the fact that Dempsey fought in an era boasting such superstars as Bobby Jones, Billy Tilden, Red Grange, Paavo Murmi and Babe Ruth.

Dempsey gave forty-three experts their greatest thrill, but not all in the same fight. The slugfest he had with Luis Firpo in 1923 packed the ultimate in excitement for seventeen observers. Just as many more got their big moment out of the long count episode in the second match with Gene Tunney. Five recall the Dempsey-Willard bout most vividly; four the bout in which Jack lost the crown to Tunney at Philadelphia in 1926.

FOOTBALL MOST POPULAR

Obviously the "contact sports" pack the most thrills for experts and fans alike. It is no surprise to find football and boxing ranked ahead of baseball, the most popular national sport in this respect. A total of seventy-nine sports editors and writers find that football furnished their greatest thrill as compared with a total of 62 for boxing and 51 in baseball. Golf supplied big moments for 20 experts, track for 11.

The Southern California-Notre Dame game of 1931 tops the gridiron list for excitement, with 18 votes for it. The world series of 1929, in which the Athletics beat the Cubs with the pitching help of Howard Ehmke, and the ten-run rally in the fifth game is the choice of 13 for supplying the most thrills.

Cleveland Indians Purchase Joe Boley From Philadelphia

CLEVELAND, Jan. 23 (AP).—Joe Boley, veteran shortstop of the Athletics, has been purchased by the Cleveland Indians to bolster their infield, it was announced today by Billy Evans, general manager of the tribe.

VANCOUVER, Jan. 23 (CP).—St. Andrews Football Club was found guilty of violation of clause 83 of the D.F.A. regulations in that they offered inducement to Daisy Waugh to transfer from Nanaimo City without the proper seven days' transfer notice being given to the Nanaimo club, at a meeting of the B.C.F.A. here tonight. The Mainland club was severely censured and asked to pay the costs of the Nanaimo club delegate who came to the meeting to present the protest. DODGERS BUY HACK WILSON

Last Season's Stormy Petrel Purchased by Brooklyn Ball Club

NEW YORK, Jan. 23 (AP)—The Brooklyn Dodgers, hoping for a National League pennant this year, reached out today and grabbed Lewis Robert "Hack" Wilson, home-run hitting outfielder, from the St. Louis Cards. To get Wilson the Dodgers parted with a young outfielder, Bob Parham, and an unannounced amount of cash. Parham was one of the Eastern League's leading batsmen with Hartford last season. Frank B. York, president of the Dodgers, confirmed details of the deal, said Brooklyn needed a right-handed hitter in the outfield and Wilson was the answer.

"We figure Hack will have another good year like he did in 1930," said York. "If he does we should be a contender."

There were no indications of just what sort of a contract the Dodgers would offer Wilson. It was considered likely, however, they would offer him a few thousand more than did the Cards, and perhaps tack on a bonus clause contingent on performance.

MARTIN SIGNS CARD CONTRACT

World's Series Hero Pleased With Terms Offered by St. Louis Club

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 23 (AP).—The "Wild Horse of Osage" is safe in the Cardinal corral.

John L. "Pepper" Martin, hero of the 1931 world's series, today signed a contract for the coming year in the office of Branch Rickey, vice-president of the world's champions.

The amount was not announced, but the popular guess put it almost double the $4,000 for which "Pepper" worked last season. "Pepper" has often expressed confidence that the Cardinals would treat him well. As he put his signature on the dotted line, he grinned his best Martin grin and announced that Rickey "sure done right by me."

Martin was the one man show of the last series, and was selected by sports editors of the country as the hero of the outstanding individual achievement of the sports world during the year.

But "Pepper" says it has not gone to his head. "I'm still wearing the same size hat and I'm still the same John Martin who was trying last Summer to get an occasional base hit," he said.

Front View of Racing Car

THE illustration shows the weird lines of Norman (Wizard) Smith's racing car, the Enterprise, which is expected to shatter the world's land speed record this month at Ninety-Mile Beach, N.Z. The car has streamlines somewhat similar to the famous Golden Arrow, but develops nearly double the horsepower. The Enterprise, with its secret mystery engine which was loaned by the British Government, has a theoretical speed of 300 miles per hour. Smith hopes to better Sir Malcolm Campbell's 245 miles per hour record by a considerable margin.

TALES OF A WAYSIDE TEE

It's hard to know just when to stop generalizing about gold and admit that individual factors are taking the whip hand.

Time after time the temptation to hang similar circumstances of the links on the same peg presents itself, and right now one of the provocative points is George Von Elm's scoring pace. The general head under which one is tempted to list his case is "incentive—lack of."

The one greatest menace to continued success by the established masters of the ancient game is lack of the overpowering urge to win. Concentration is wrapped up with it, but old-fashioned raw hunger distinguishes the expert, who is winning, from his equals in shot-making prowess who are simply stringing along in the procession.

The blond tiger of the West, as Von Elm came to be known when mopping up the amateur events on the coast, has been one of the most stern-jawed competitors in golf. A persistent jinx in luck smothered his efforts to get through black Wednesday in four successive national amateur championships ever since he beat Bobby Jones for the crown at Baltusrol in 1926. But this sort of persecution complex was a great help to him in keeping his nose close to the grindstone. Many another good golfer envies Van Elm his competitive ferocity.

Last year was Von Elm's greatest, because he had something important to prove. He was experimenting with a new category in golf—he was proving that a business man golfer had a place in the game. The assignment drove him at a hot pace, and he scored brilliantly almost every time he went into action, no matter how important or unimportant was the event.

THE USUAL REACTION

It looks as if the reaction has set in, just as it did in the case of Gene Sarazen—and I don't mean the time that Sarazen's mechanism went haywire, along in 1923-24-25. Von Elm is under the baleful gleam of the national open complex. He has tasted all the subordinate sweets; he has proved his game is sound and his courage unbounded. He may say that in events like the Los Angeles and the Agua Caliente open he was trying just as hard as he did a year ago, and would probably have some other explanations, but—again dangerously generalizing—it seems clear that the gnawing urge to demonstrate isn't as active.

He's now loaded all his eggs in one basket, marked "to be delivered to Fresh Meadow Golf Club, June, 1932." Sarazen has all his eggs in the same basket. And so have MacDonald Smith and Tommy Armour. All these mighty men of the links have been graduated from the year-round frenzy. They have no overpowering inclinations to win every event they enter.

But there is one difficulty. Playing golf as a habit, even competitive golf, as many of the leaders do throughout the year, puts too much of a strain on the temperament when they suddenly tense themselves for the open. That's where Bobby Jones had something on them. He shifted into high for the big event, but he hadn't been droning along in second all season. It is probable that had he won at Inverness in 1930, when he finished only four strokes back of Ray, the winner, with a last round of 77, Jones' unparalleled powers of concentration would never have been developed.

The mental attitude of an open champion, either defending or trying to get back his laurels, is a far more interesting study than the attitude of a challenger, which is direct, coiled with the force of a mainspring, but not bothered by fear of yielding prestige. This contrast will make Billie Burke's showing at Fresh Meadow one of the major attractions of the golfing year. His relentless purpose and magnificent self-possession at Inverness showed a unity of mind and fibre. Compared to the clamoring of voices in his ears this year, that Ohio campaign will seem like a simple dream.

MENTAL ATTITUDE

Few will believe the terrific part mental attitude plays in golf. The necessity of concentration is important in every stroke played. A few days ago I was talking with the president of a large organization, who in the past had played consistently under 80. I asked him how his golf game had been this Summer.

"Terrible," he said. "I've been up around 90 most of the time. I still have the same swing," he continued. "But I've had too many other things to think about, even while out playing golf. I might be able to concentrate for a few holes and get a few pars. Then I'm suddenly worrying about some phase of business and up pop the 6's and 7's. You can't play good golf and be thinking of something else. I don't care how good your swing is."

Bobby Jones will give you the same answer. No golf swing is good enough to take care of itself, especially through a match. The mental side must be in control, although the thinking happens to be along simple lines.

There must be a keen and steady urge to keep this concentration intact through a match. This doesn't mean that the duffer can concentrate himself into a star. There are too many physical faults to be corrected first. But even the duffer can chop away many strokes by concentrating on a smooth back swing, control of tension and lack of hurry, for example.

Copeland's Try in First Half Gives Students Victory Over Scottish XV

FOUR OTHER GAMES REMAIN UNPLAYED

Taking the ball over at his feet and failing on it fifteen minutes after the opening whistle for the only score of the game "Chuck" Copeland, speedy three-quarter, gave Victoria College a 3-0 victory over the Canadian Scottish fifteen yesterday afternoon at the Victoria High School grounds in the initial fixture of the second half schedule in the Intermediate Rugby League.

Owing to the heavy frost Friday night, which made the grounds hard, the two senior fixtures and a like number of intermediate matches were canceled yesterday morning by officials of the Victoria Rugby Union. The High School pitch was in good condition when College and Scottish arrived and the referee permitted the teams to play.

College found the troops a tough squad to beat and were forced to fight hard for victory. The troops had a decided advantage in weight and pushed the Collegians all over the field at intervals during both halves. Scottish pressed from the start and had College's backfield battling hard to avert scoring. Following a three-quarter run to Scottish's twenty-five, Copeland took the ball at his feet and fell on it after crossing the line for the long y. Bob Carey failed to convert.

TROOPS PRESS HARD

In the second half, Scottish again forced College back into their own twenty-five, but try as they did they failed to penetrate the blue and gold backfield. Once Parker tried a drop kick and narrowly missed after a good attempt. College managed to hold the troops at bay until the whistle, which ended the game with the Scottish still pounding away.

Bill Boorman refereed and the teams follow:

Canadian Scottish—Hall, Hesslen, Sweet, Crabtree, Cornelle, Lee, Rowton, Beckett, Quinn, Hocking, Warburton Parker, Stark, Muirhead and Lund.

Draws will compel the following matches to be replayed: Newcastle United vs. Southport, Portsmouth vs. Aston Villa and Sunderland vs. Stoke City.

The surprise of the games today was the defeat of Sheffield United by the Second Division club, Bury. Top score was compiled by The Wednesday, who blanked Bournemouth and Boscombe by seven goals.

Lambert, Arsenal's brilliant young star, contributed two goals to their tally of four against Plymouth Argyle at Highbury. Hulme added another, while Roberts put the ball through his own goal to complete the Londoners' score. Plymouth marksmen were Vidler and Leslie.

Bradford's rather unexpectedly big score of four goals against Northampton Town came from Leedsham, Harwood, Dickinson and Davis. Walls and Lovatt netted for the beaten club.

MILLS SCORES TWICE

The sterling work of Barton enabled Liverpool to oust Chesterfield from the competition. He hit the target successfully four times for Liverpool's entire score. Abel and Ruddy goaled for the losers.

Those doughty cup fighters, Blackburn Rovers, were put out by Derby County, Ramage scoring twice and Powers once for the winners. Rovers' scorers were Britton and Cunliffe.

Bestall's two goals for Grimsby enabled them to eliminate the runners-up in the cup competition last year, Birmingham, a surprise result. Bradford, Birmingham's star forward, worked hard but could only get one goal.

Huddersfield Town at home swamped Queen's Park Rangers by five goals to nil, Letke (two), Mongnall (two) and Campbell dividing the winners' tally.

PERFORMS HAT TRICK

Newcastle United, through Boyd, and Southport, through Cowen, each had a goal. The necessary replay will be at Southport. Thackeray goaled for Portsmouth and Beresford for the Villa. Their next meeting will be at Birmingham.

Preston North End kilted the hopes of Wolverhampton Wanderers. Rowley and Harper were Preston scorers, while the Wanderers made no reply.

Leicester City's sterling forwards, Hine and Chandler, goaled against Port Vale, who got a goal through Nolan. Millership and Burgess were in great form for The Wednesday against Bournemouth and Boscombe, the former netting four times and the latter three. The Southerners never looked like scoring against the great Sheffield machine.

Scorers in the Sunderland-Stoke City drawn match were McDougall, for the former club, and Mawson, for the latter. The replay will be at Stoke.

Watford 2, Bristol City 1.
Grimsby Town 2, Birmingham 1.
Port Vale 1, Leicester City 2.
Manchester City 6, Brentford 1.

BEC KILREA

It is hard to recognize the sterling Ottawa Senators' star, Hec Kilrea, in the Detroit Falcons outfit. Hec is one of the best players in the National Hockey League, but he seems to be suffering from the same jinx as Ace Bailey, of Toronto, who can do everything but score.

Fred Marberry Is Dissatisfied With Contract

CORSICANA, Texas, Jan. 23 (AP).—Fred Marberry, Washington Senators' pitching ace, today expressed dissatisfaction with the contract offered him by the American League club. He said it called for a salary reduction.

The big right-hander said he had not signed the contract. He planned to take it with him to the Spring training camp and negotiate directly with club officials then.

He said he was not a holdout and was sure he would be able to reach a satisfactory agreement with the Senators. He declined to say how much the proposed contract offered.

Eddie Cantor's Newest Sensation Showing Here

Eddie Cantor's newest play "Palmy Days," is now showing at the Dominion Theatre, successor to the goggle-eyed comic's inaugural "Whoopee" of last season.

Eddie appears as an unwilling assistant to a gang of crooked fortune tellers and spiritualists, planning to wreck a bakery by installing Eddie as an efficiency expert. The story was written by Cantor, Morrie Ryskind and David Freedman. It is a rowdy comic strip kind of a yarn, moving blithely from the phoney mystic's holy of holies to the splendor of a futuristic bakery —one of those Rube Goldberg bakeries, "manned" by an imposing assemblage of Hollywood's most decorative femininity. Sharing the comedy honors with the beady-eyed and ebullient Eddie is elongated Charlotte Greenwood. Together, they lead their company through a striking gymnasium number, giving more authenticity than usual to elaborate and complicated precision routines by a large dancing chorus. And they lead the cast in an exhibition of dunking-as-it-should-be-dunked.

Barbara ("Bobbie") Weeks, Goldwyn's newest and most-talked-of screen discovery, makes her screen debut at the head of the battalion of Hollywood's most beautiful girls and has the romantic lead in the story as well. Walter Catlett has a comedy bit, while important roles are played by Spencer Charters, Paul Page, Charles Middleton and Harry Woods.

The former showered her with all varieties of costly gifts and feted her in sumptuous fashion. The impecunious one gave her only his devotion, for it was all he had to give. Still, devotion, is a beautiful thing, even in these modern times.

So she fell in love with the poor fellow. But she married the rich one.

YOUNG TALENT IN "ROAD TO RENO"

Coming Stars of Tomorrow Featured in Picture Now Showing at Columbia Theatre

Paramount studios have inaugurated a system whereby the motion picture talent of tomorrow learns from the leaders of today.

With fourteen stars, forty-one featured players, thirty directors and fifty-one writers under contract, this studio has in the feature players and writer list many whom it expects to be famous, as well as many who now are recognized leaders.

"The Road to Reno," now showing at the Columbia Theatre, is an outstanding example of the use of contract people, with seventeen connected with the production; thirteen players, a director and three writers.

The players, many of whom have achieved prominence, are Lilyan Tashman, Charles "Buddy" Rogers, Peggy Shannon, William Boyd, Irving Pichel, Wynne Gibson, Skeets Gallagher, Judith Wood, Tom Douglas, Kent Taylor, Frances Moffett, Charles D. Brown and Claire Dodd.

"The Road to Reno" is the story of the divorce mill activities in this Citadel of You-Sue-Me. Rogers and Miss Shannon are the young lovers whose romance gets mixed with the divorce-seeking efforts of Miss Tashman, Judith Wood and Wynne Gibson. Boyd is the affable villain in the production.

FINE RECEPTION GIVEN PLAYERS

Sir Barry Jackson and Company Have Been Well Received on Canadian Tour

Success far anticipating the most sanguine hopes of Sir Barry Jackson has been experienced by his company in Canada, reports H. L. Appleby, his advance manager, who reached the city yesterday.

Confident, after seeing their success in the East, that "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," "Dear Brutus," and "Yellow Sands" were well launched, Sir Barry left some time ago for England to look after some of his numerous theatrical interests there, including the great undertaking of the Malvern Festival to be held in August. But he keeps closely in touch with the company, and has less reason than ever to revise his gratified first estimate after seeing the reception in Montreal and Toronto, as nowhere in the whole tour has greater enthusiasm been shown than during the last three weeks in Vancouver, Mr. Appleby reports. He anticipates a similar interest here.

Victoria is to be the first place in Canada, with the exception of one or two private schools in Toronto, to see "Quality Street" and "She Stoops to Conquer," he stated. "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," and "Yellow Sands" will be played during the coming week.

While Mr. Appleby attributes the success of the Canadian tour to the brilliant success of the opening night in Montreal when a distinguished and representative audience was present, including His Excellency the Governor-General, who came down by special train from Ottawa to attend the performance. This success was repeated in Toronto, where the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario was among the first-night patrons. Everywhere the reception has been overwhelming, the return engagements have been demanded by Toronto, Hamilton, London and other cities. After playing three weeks in Vancouver the company is returning for an additional fortnight to present the remaining plays in the repertoire.

PENSIONS BOARD HERE ON MONDAY

Tribunal Will Open Sittings to Hear Appeals From Ex-Soldier Pensioners on Island

To hear appeals of ex-soldier pensioners from rulings of the Board of Pensions Commissioners, the British Columbia Pensions Tribunal will open sittings in Victoria next Monday morning, with Col. Cyrus Peck, V.C., and Captain E. C. MacKenzie presiding.

Captain MacKenzie arrived in the city yesterday and registered at the Empress Hotel. On account of lack of accommodation at the Courthouse sittings may be held in the boardroom at the Belmont Building.

Colonel Peck spent yesterday in the Gulf Islands constituency, which he represented in the Provincial Legislature before assuming office as a member of the Pensions Tribunal. He will return to the city in time for the Monday session. A number of appeal cases are on the docket for hearing.

"Suicide Fleet" Is Tale Of Romantic Adventure

William Boyd Gives Outstanding Performance in Blood-Tingling Story of the Sea Opening at Capitol Theatre Tomorrow

The picture combines a great romantic adventure story, excellent performances by an outstanding cast, splended direction and photography, and amazing production values. Whole divisions of navy destroyers and submarines are used in the sensational sea battles in which two clipper ships are actually sunk by real shells from the submarines sending the shattered parts of the vessels leaping thousands of feet in the air.

The spectacular photographic shots give audiences an illusion of reality which never once breaks. The action is fast and builds steadily toward a tremendous dramatic climax. There is plenty of comedy and sufficient, but not too much, love interest.

Splendid work is done by Bill Boyd, Robert Armstrong, James Gleason, Ginger Rogers, Harry Bannister and other members of the imposing cast.

"I never wait for mistletoe," said an audacious young scamp to a more bashful companion. "Whenever I see a really pretty girl, I walk straight up and ask for a kiss."

"By Jove," said his friend. "You must get an awful lot of rebuffs."

VIVID CLIMAX IN PLAYHOUSE FILM

Marion Davies Leads Cast in "The Bachelor Father," Opening at Local Theatre Tomorrow

As though laughing for a solid hour were not enough, Director Robert Z. Leonard takes his audience up in a giant trimotored airplane and wrecks it against a treetop for a thrilling climax to "The Bachelor Father," Marion Davies' new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle, which opens at the Playhouse Theatre tomorrow.

The wreck is real beyond words and the masterful screening of this exciting incident is guaranteed to provide thrills for the patrons.

The talkisation of the David Belasco stage hit is by far the best vehicle Miss Davies has had since the medium of sound came into favor. In it she achieves the finest performance of her career and brings to the screen a characterisation long to be remembered.

C. Aubrey Smith, the veteran English comedian, repeats the title role he created on the stage and adds vastly to the hilarious enjoyment afforded by the delightful screen offering.

Exciting Encounters Are" Seen in "77 Park Lane

Famous English Production, Starring Dennis Neilson-Terry, Now at Empire Theatre, Drawing Throngs of Victoria Patrons

For the first time in England, production of a talkie was planned in the English, French and Spanish languages when "77 Park Lane," the thrilling drama which is now showing at the Empire Theatre, went on the studio schedule of the Famous Players Guild.

Three complete casts were assembled in the studio by Albert de Courville, the director, and John E. Harding, production supervisor, and scenes were photographed with the English, French and Spanish players alternating on the set. Important stars were engaged for all three versions.

Lord Brent, the principal character, played in the English version by Dennis Neilson-Terry, was portrayed in French by Jean Murat and in Spanish by Alphonse Granada. Mary, the heroine, was played in the respective versions by Betty Stockfield, Suzy Pierson and Elena d'Algy, and the part of Sheringham was entrusted to Malcolm Keen, Leon Bary and Algara de Varcey.

The story of "77 Park Lane" deals with the series of exciting adventures which befall the wealthy Lord Brent, who returns to the West End from abroad on boat race night to encounter by chance at a coffee stall an unknown girl by whom he is immediately attracted. His discovery that she is involved in a strange intrigue in a gambling den which turns out to be located in his own town mansion in Park Lane, supposedly unoccupied; his subsequent meeting with the crooks who are installed in the illicit den, and his ultimate rescue of the girl, provide a wealth of adventure and thrill, together with a generous amount of light-humored comedy.

FAMOUS PLAY TO BE GIVEN HERE

Sir Barry Jackson's Company Will Offer "The Barretts of Wimpole Street"

"The Barretts of Wimpole Street," which Sir Barry Jackson will offer at the Royal Theatre next Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday as the first vehicle for his company of British players, has, during its present phenomenally successful runs in both London and New York, drawn into its thrall the generations that know the movies and the radio better than the Brownings, or the romance it has brought to life.

To achieve this end Rudolf Besier's translation of the sublime romance of the love of Elizabeth Barrett and Robert Browing from the legend that had come to hallow it, into terms of the stage might easily have profaned it. But the great story, which now lives on the stage, is all beauty, all sympathy and understanding, and vibrant with that high poetic import and spiritual loveliness associated with the original. This is its double triumph.

The love story that works the miracle unfolds itself, too, in all the delightful naturalness, grace of spirit, beauty of utterance, strength and high thought which are part of its intimate history. His company, which will also be seen in "Yellow Sands" the last two days of this week's engagement here, comprises over thirty prominent London artists, including such well-known names as Daphne Heard, Julian d'Albie, Sophie Stewart and Donald Wolfit.

What Today Means

"AQUARIUS"

If January 24 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 7 a.m. to 8:40 a.m., from 1 p.m. to 2:30 p.m. and from 7:30 p.m. to 9 p.m. The danger periods are from 11 a.m. to 12:30 a.m. and from 5 p.m. to 6:15 p.m.

Both unpropitious and un-Sabbathlike influences will be engendered on January 24, and it will be difficult to obtain that spiritual solace or recreational change to which you are accustomed. There will be an uneasiness in the atmosphere as of an approaching disaster. No wearing clouds of misfortune for the immediate future, however.

The child born on this January 24 will have an equable, friendly, companionable and cheerful nature. It will be fearless in its sports, persistent in its work, and steadfast in its love. Its moral nature will be firm, and it will not be easily led or influenced.

Born January 24, there are many substantial and sound traits to be found in your character. The fact that you are a better listener than talker serves well enough for a window of your personality. Others find it a treat to talk to you, and soon recognize your high degree of intelligence, by the attentive, understanding manner in which you comprehend things. The one driving force in your life is learning, and you have a passionate, uncritical voracity to know. When anything interests you, you work like an ant and study like an ecstatic.

An outward coldness and immobility clings about you, as from a Puritan ancestry. You have undoubting religious faith, and are a little intolerant toward "unbelievers." To you there are no shading of right or wrong, and your judgments are rather harsh. You believe in justice, untinged with sentiment, for one and all. From a book standpoint, you are a very wise being, but not an understanding one when it comes to human frailties. Some blow or sorrow of a personal nature may open your eyes and soften your heart in this respect. You always bear your suffering in a stoical manner, and seldom reveal your inner soul to anyone.

"AQUARIUS"

If January 25 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8 a.m. to 9:10 a.m., and from 2 p.m. to 3:45 p.m. and from 9 p.m. to 10:40 p.m. The danger periods are from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and from 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m.

Fate will not be in a flattering mood on January 25, and successes will only be meted out according to measure of ability and amount of energy spent in securing returns. The gods will help those who help themselves, and none other, on this date.

The child born on this January 25 will be affectionate and good-natured, kind in manner and a maker of friends. Much of its fate and many events in its life will come about through the influence of its associates. Without necessarily being irresolute, it will largely depend upon someone else.

Born January 25, you have a brave, courageous spirit, and are not a follower of the roads of least resistance. You are always willing to forsake the down grades, if by climbing and perspiring, you can attain your share of those things only obtained on the heights. On the one hand, you are guided by prudence, foresight, a looking-before-and-after; on the other, ambition, hope and adventure. You are often warned by one "still voice" to forsake your favorite star, but another voice from within urges you on. Ambition with you often outpipes reason.

You have a stimulating nature; enthusiasm such as yours is infectious. You are full of ideas, not all practicable, but they are evidence of a modern and progressive outlook. Your associates soon learn that you are a human force which means something. You have an animal zest in life, and are a very genuine worker. Both your mind and muscle are often stretched beyond the normal, but the triumph, the achievement, are worth all the exhaustion.

You have too warm a nature and are too full of affection not to be an easy mark for cupid, and it is not probable that you will only be "in love" once. Your fickleness, as regards those of the opposite sex is a weakness on your part which will be eventually overcome.

Wandering Youths Held by Police on Charge of Begging

Drifting westward from the prairies via the side door Pullman route, car barges across the Gulf and then on foot from Ladysmith to Victoria, three youths who gave their names as Robert Nelson, Jack West and Mike Podovsky, ran into a bushel of trouble which landed them into police cells on charges of begging and vagrancy.

The three appeared in the city police court yesterday morning and heard the evidence of a woman resident of Yates Street, who told the police magistrate how she had taken a kindly interest in the boys and had given them fifty cents with which to secure lodgings for the night.

A chance remark of "That wasn't so bad," made by one of the trio on leaving the woman's home, roused her suspicions that she had been imposed upon. She watched the three and saw them go down Yates Street towards the business section and then turn around. As she stood by the gate of her home the three passed, but the one to whom she had given the money left the other two and went off in another direction. The police department was notified and the youths were placed under arrest.

The three were remanded to Monday morning and, in the meantime, the police will endeavor to obtain information concerning the recent activities of the wanderers.

'ALWAYS GOOD-BYE' OPENS TOMORROW

Lewis Stone and Elissa Landi Star in Film Coming to Romano Theatre

Set a thief to catch a thief!

Stone plays a wealthy diamond miner. He is entertaining, at his Como estate, Paul Cavanagh, whom he knows to be an impostor, and Elissa Landi, posing as Cavanagh's wife.

Cavanagh is intent on stealing the "Heart of Flame," diamond, Stone's rarest gem, which he keeps in his private wall safe. Acting on the advice of Scotland Yard, Stone reveals the combination to Miss Landi, hoping to trap Cavanagh.

HE NEVER SAT DOWN TO EAT

Lived on Eggs and Milk for Years

Now "Can Eat Anything" Thanks to Kruschen

A good appetite is usually a sign of good health. And a poor appetite is a sure sign that something is wrong somewhere. If you do not eat your meals and enjoy them, without any unpleasant after-effects, read this letter. The treatment that put this man right would surely be good for you, too:—

"I have much pleasure to be able to inform you that by regularly taking Kruschen Salts I regained my appetite, and have been completely released from pains which I had suffered in body and limbs.

"For years I disliked all eating, especially solid food. I never sat down at table during meals, and lived on milk and two eggs daily. One month ago, I started to take Kruschen Salts, and now I can eat anything with the greatest appetite."—J. F. D.

There are six salts in Kruschen, and every one of them is necessary to perfect health. If you lead a strenuous life in the open air, if every organ in your body performs its functions perfectly, if your diet is exactly balanced, then you can extract from the food you eat and the air you breathe all that is necessary to keep you fit. But if you spend the greater part of your life indoors, if you cannot get all the fresh air and exercise you need, if your eliminating organs don't do their work easily, naturally, and regularly, if your diet is not exactly what it should be, if you wake unrefreshed, eat without appetite, work without zest, and play without enjoyment—Kruschen is what you need, and Kruschen will put you right.

Kruschen sweetens and cleanses your blood, sets your internal machinery working smoothly, sends you out into sunshine or shower with the same cheery readiness for the day's work or the day's play.

SIR HUBERT WILKINS HERE NEXT WEDNESDAY

The Victoria public will have the opportunity to hear Sir Hubert Wilkins in person tell of his remarkable submarine voyage to Polar regions, and will see his thrilling motion picture of the entire journey of the Nautilus, next Wednesday evening at the City Temple. The lecture will be given under the auspices of the Victoria Rotary Club.

Eliminate the Frills from Advertising!

FOLKS who are in the position to know where sales are made, where results are immediate and who demand action from advertising—continue to use space in the daily newspapers.

While others argue about the efficacy of various media, the retailer who sells direct to the consumer consistently invests his money in daily newspapers. The retailer demands dividends, and he gets them—rich dividends.

The medicine that is good for the retail outlet is equally good for national advertisers whose aim is to reach the same consumer through the retailer.

The biggest advertisers in the world use daily newspapers day in day out, year in and year out, and they must know something about successful advertising.

THE most successful national advertisers in Canada have always made the daily newspapers the backbone, if not the entire structure, of their merchandising set up. They too have found frills costly and non-productive.

There are still those who must learn by a series of experiments—do you want to be one of these in 1932?

Make no mistake, the retailer knows where results are sure, where sales are made. National advertisers will do well to keep this in mind when making plans for increased sales in Canada this year.

We suggest the elimination of frills in advertising and the focussing of attention on the markets afforded by daily newspapers where the audience is always assured.

This advertisement is sponsored by the Canadian Daily Newspapers' Association.

Security Prices Still Dropping At Wall Street

NEW YORK, Jan. 23 (AP).—The stock market extended its reaction today, but the decline was much narrower than Friday, average losses amounting to a minor fraction in a turnover of 833,460 shares.

Railroad stocks stiffened around the end of the first hour, but lost interest later. Santa Fe and Union Pacific were down about a point net. New York Central and Baltimore & Ohio returned fractional advances. U.S. Steel was off 1 3-8. Case, Liggett & Myers issues, Texas Gulf, Wrigley, American Smelting and American Sugar yielded approximately a point; so did American Telephone and Consolidated Gas.

General Electric eased to another low at 20 5-8. Heaviness is being attributed to fears that railroad electrification programmes, as well as municipal improvements in the company's field, will be curtailed during 1932. Restriction of public utility expansion also would tend to hold down General Electric's earnings. There has been, however, no serious question of the dividend's safety in the immediate future.

Although various issues displayed resisting tendencies, the bond market again closed somewhat lower today with trading bordering on listlessness.

Stocks Drift Lower With Light Trading At Eastern Markets

The selling of Montreal Power, which started yesterday with the lowering of the pegged price of that issue from 38 to 36, continued today the stock absorbing 5,200 shares of the approximate turnover of 7,000 shares. It sold at the minimum of 36.

Canada Cement, with a turnover of about 400 shares, sold down 1-8 at 6 3-8. Brazilian was up 1-8 to 12 5-8. International Nickel was unchanged at 9 1-2. Canadian Pacific was down 1-2 at 16 3-4. Smelters eased 1-4 to 70. McColl-Frontenac, Steel of Canada and Shawinigan were unchanged. Massey-Harris eased a small fraction to 3 3-4.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE

TORONTO, Jan. 23. — Toronto Stock Exchange market drifted lower in extremely dull trading today. The market was following the trend of New York, and interlisted issues were the principal ones affected.

C.P.R. went down below 17 for a loss of approximately half a point Nickel at 9 1-2 and Brazilian, at 12 1-2 were each down 1-8, of a point. Smelters at 69 lost one. Consumers' Gas dropped 1 1-4 to 161, with one share selling at 160. Ford of Canada was unchanged at 13 1-2, Canadian Dredge unchanged at 13, Bell Telephone still at the pegged price of 119.

Massey-Harris was under pressure and lost 1-4 point when it sold down to 3 3-4. Steel of Canada dropped 1-2 and Walkers was softer at 3. Service Stations came out at 66, and the preferred at 46.

Oils were firmer than most sections of the list, individual stocks closing fractionally unchanged from last night.

WHEAT PRICES DROP SLIGHTLY

Half-Cent Loss Taken With Light Demand for Export Trade

WINNIPEG, Jan. 23 (CP).—Waning interest at Chicago and lack of export trade continued to exert a weakening effect on wheat prices in today's short session. Prices closed 1-2 lower than Friday's figures.

May closed at 62 1-4; July at 63 1-2, and October at 65.

Chicago's weakness was attributed to easiness in the securities market and to lack of speculative demand for grain. Local prices reflected only a part of the weakness, but there was little support.

Liverpool prices were unchanged to slightly lower. A decline in sterling was a factor in sustaining the English market, which reflected little buying by importers.

Cash wheat and coarse grains showed improved demand, but offerings were light and spreads little changed.

Body of "Joe" Drinkwater, Famous Outdoor Character of Great Central Lake, Found on Its Shore—Known Throughout Continent

PORT ALBERNI, Jan. 23.—Sergeant Markland, of the Alberni Division of the Provincial Police returned to town Thursday evening with the body of Joe Drinkwater, well known explorer, prospector and story teller of the Great Central Lake district. "Joe," as he was known to hundreds of fishermen and vacationists from all parts of the continent, died, as he always hoped he would, with his shoes on, his body being found on the shore of the lake, with his boots in the water.

A short time ago he complained of not feeling well and when a friend cautioned him to take care of himself during his one-man trips he only laughed and replied, "Well, if I die with my shoes on, on the shore of my lake I'll die happy."

Drinkwater always referred to the Great Central Lake as my lake. While he was not the discoverer of it, it was Joe who made the trail to the lake in order that he could bring in his provisions. Later this trail was turned into a wagon road, until today it is the main and only highway leading to the lake.

WONDERFUL SCENE

In his many trips of exploration he discovered a beautiful little lake high up in the mountains and near by a waterfall, one of the highest in the world. He named these Della Lake and Della Falls after his wife, and today this district, known as the Drinkwater district, is one of the wonders of Vancouver Island. The famous Drinkwater Creek will remain as a memory to his name.

It was while making a trip from the West Coast of the Island to Great Central Lake that he discovered the Big Interior Mine, one of the most famous bodies of ore on the continent. This consists of a mountain of copper ore and has again and again been bonded by many of the leading mining and smelting companies in Canada and the United States. Owing to the great expense of transportation, however, the companies have one after another dropped their options. The last company to send in its engineers was the Huronian Belt Company of Toronto and London, England. Dr. Boydell, of Toronto, and Mr. Charles Bramble, of Victoria, were two of the engineers.

HOST AT THE ARK

Joe was best known as the host at the famous "Ark," a floating hotel on the lake, and it was here that so many Victorians spent many happy vacations. This was destroyed some years ago together with all its contents. Since then Joe made his headquarters in a little house at this end of the lake, although he kept two log cabins at the far end of the lake to accommodate his guests. Late this Summer a party of Victorians spent a holiday there under his guidance.

Joe often stated that the greatest blow which he ever received was notice from the E. & N. Railway to vacate the land on which he had his cabin. It was a strange thing thing that, although he resided on the lake for over forty years, he never owned an inch of property on it, while he often stated that he owned the whole lake. Notice to vacate was given to him following the retirement of his friend, H. E. Beasley, former superintendent of the railway and was caused to a great extent by the new officials not knowing the beloved pioneer.

SAVED HIS HOME

A friend hearing of Joe's trouble called upon him and to his great surprise found him with tears streaming down his cheeks. "I have no place to go," exclaimed Joe. Through the efforts of Mr. Beasley and other friends the railway company was persuaded to allow him to continue his recidence on the lake shore at the rental of $1 a year.

He was predeceased by his wife Della a number of years ago, while he is survived by his brothers, Jack, George and Alfred, all resident in the Alberni district.

SCHOOL TRUSTEES AT NANAIMO SWORN IN

NANAIMO, Jan. 23.—Last evening in the council chambers John Shaw swore in Frederick Busby, John Bennett, Mrs. A. Ekins and Mrs. Emily J. Griffith to serve as school trustees during the years 1932-33, after each had signed and sworn to a declaration office. John Shaw was elected chairman for the year.

The chairman then named the following committees, the first named being chairman: Finance, Trustees Busby and Ekins; social welfare, Trustees Ekins and Griffiths; building, Trustees Gray and Bennett; supply, Trustees Griffith and Bennett.

After general discussion, in which all trustees took part, it was decided on motion of Trustees Bennett and Busby that the chairman go to Victoria on Tuesday with the mayor and city clerk, for the meeting of delegates of the Union of Municipalities and there take up the matter of a reduced grant with the Government, and also with the union delegates, as it was felt a strong protest should be made against the reduction in the education grant.

COMMITTEES FOR YEAR STRUCK AT LADYSMITH

LADYSMITH, Jan. 23.—Formal swearing in of the new members of the City Council, and the appointment of committees for the year, were the only items transacted at the first meeting of the new council, held yesterday at the City Hall.

Dady; sewers and cemetery, Aldermen A. Dady and J. D. Giovando; fire wardens, Aldermen W. Bauld and D. Davidson; board of health, Mayor and aldermen.

The Ladysmith Board of School Trustees has arranged committees for the year. J. Lowery continues as chairman of the board; W. Cullum and A. Dady comprise the finance committee; on the purchasing committee are A. Dady, W. Cullum and J. Lowery; on the buildings committee are W. Davenport, J. Rodger and A. Dady, while J. Rodger is chairman of the dental and health committee, which comprises the others on the board.

GRAIN MARKET WEEKLY REVIEW

WINNIPEG, Jan. 23 (CP).—Winnipeg wheat market went to foreign fields in search of leadership last week, gaining support from Chicago, and prices closed the week 1-4 to 1-2 cents higher. Despite somewhat bearish world news the southern market displayed an upward tendency and this, together with good purchases here by Chicago and New York interests, gave Winnipeg prices a boost.

Starting the week with fairly good activity, daily fluctuations ranging more than one cent, trading gradually died down and towards the end of the six-day period the pit presented a deserted appearance.

At the close of trading yesterday the May delivery option was quoted at 62 3-4, a gain of 1-4 cent for the week. July and October futures each scored hard-won 1-2 cent gains at 64 and 65 1-2, respectively.

For the second successive week practically no export interest was uncovered. European buyers continued to neglect North American offerings, in favor of the cheaper wheats of Argentina and Australia. Argentine wheat was reported as being offered at prices considerably under cost of production, and 3,851,000 bushels of wheat was exported from that country during the week, a 1,000,000-bushel increase over the previous week.

Australia exported a record amount of wheat during the week, nearly 8,000,000 bushels leaving that Dominion. More than 14,000,000 bushels of wheat have been shipped from Australia during the past two weeks, establishing an all-time record for wheat clearances.

Export sales of oats from Vancouver provided the interest in coarse grains, though volume was not large. Coarse grain futures remained steady, generally following wheat throughout.

The Listening Post

By WALTER TRUMBULL
(Copyright, 1932, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

We notice, as the seasons fly
On wings that never stop,
That games are ever governed by
The man who's at the top.

"I believe," says William F. Carey, president of Madison Square Garden, "that boxing will show an increased interest and an increased profit in 1932. The game always attracts more attention in the years when there is a good champion to meet a good contender. Schmeling and Sharkey both have come forward in the last year—Schmeling because of his bout with young Stribling, and Sharkey because he again forced his way into prominence by his fine showing against Carnera.

"When these men meet, two of the greatest heavyweights in the world will be fighting for the title, and such a bout is sure to increase interest in boxing in general."

That looks like sound common sense. Moreover, the good matches which the New York garden lately has been promoting have done their share toward making fans again enthusiastic. This is demonstrated by the fact of increased attendance.

Max Schmeling has all the confidence of a champion. He has not the slightest doubt in his mind that he can defeat Jack Sharkey. His only concern is that he shall be paid as well as possible for doing so.

Sharkey is equally confident that he can beat Schmeling. He thinks that the only thing which stands between him and the heavyweight crown is the time which will elapse before he can get the German in the ring.

With both men in this frame of mind, it should be one of the best battles since Waterloo.

When they really get down to brass tacks, it probably will not take Col. Ruppert and George Herman Ruth long to agree upon a contract.

The Babe is well satisfied with $70,000 if the Colonel will make a two-year arrangement. My guess, without knowing a thing about it, would be that Ruth will end by signing a one-year agreement for $75,000.

Charley Harvey is now willing to match his promising young heavyweight, Steve Hamas, with practically any man in the ring, except Ernie Schaaf. Harvey has a great respect for Schaaf. He thinks he is about the toughest of them all.

This confirms our own opinion. We have said for a year that Ernie Schaaf was about the toughest, most dangerous man at present in the leather pushing business. He might be outsmarted by some of the others, but none of them can outslight him.

One bout we should hate to miss is that between King Levinsky and Max Baer. Here are a couple of young men who swing from the ankles and put plenty of power behind the punch. They are not long on science, but two more earnest sluggers never were seen in a street brawl between truck drivers. Their style may be a trifle unorthodox, but they are earnest and game and should have the customers standing on their chairs before the battle ends.

Every time we read that a noted member of the Brooklyn team is dissatisfied with his contract and refuses to sign, we remember a telegram sent him under similar circumstances by your Uncle Wilber Robinson.

"You had better come in and get into condition," Robby wired. "The club is almost sure to make an example of some sap and it will probably be you."

Billy Petrolle thinks that Dempsey is plenty good enough to beat a lot of prominent heavyweights yet. Jack still has his punch and certainly can annoy any opponent who comes close enough to get hit.

MOTOR LICENCE FEES

Sir,—I think, and hope, that it is the opinion of the majority that the Provincial Government has let the province down badly, very badly, on the question of the annual automobile licence fee. If the figures quoted in the newspapers are correct, the receipts from this source must have shown a most appalling decrease, and this deficit will, of course, have to come out of poor John Citizen sooner or later.

It will be agreed, I think, that emergencies demand emergency measures, and nobody can deny that an emergency exists at present. Therefore, why does not the Government issue an emergency short-term licence—say for three months—to induce people to keep their cars on the road.

In Victoria alone the loss of revenue to the Government must be very great through the number of cars laid up because of their owners' inability to raise the money for the annual licence fee. Added to this is the loss on the gasoline tax on those cars which are now inoperative. The figures for the whole province must be tremendous.

Before thanking you in anticipation for publishing this letter on a subject which affects a great many people's welfare vitally, I should like to add that if it provokes just one half as much comment and criticism as such a futile subject as a "stationary earth," I shall be very happy.

HOWARD H. BYRNE.

CHARLES II

Sir,—Mr. P. A. Crump, in today's Colonist, says "I missed the fact that England and Scotland were separate kingdoms on January 1, 1651. Charles was crowned King of Scotland at Scone on that date." The above is not a fact; it is an incorrect statement.

Upon the death of Charles I, the Parliament of England threatened death to any who should proclaim his successor, whereupon the Parliament of Scotland, in February, 1649, passed an act proclaiming his son, Prince Charles, as "King of Great Britain, France and Ireland," that being the title the Kings received since the union in July, 1603. On January, 1651, Charles II was crowned at Scone, Scotland, as "King of Great Britain, France and Ireland."

The Parliament of England, with the approval of the Parliament of Scotland, in 1660 restored their King to his kingdom, where he reigned till his death in 1685, the Parliament of England accepting as correct the authority of the Parliament of Scotland in 1649 in proclaiming, and in 1651 as crowning Charles II King of Great Britain, France and Ireland.

A. CAMPBELL.
"Argyll," Sooke, B.C., January 21, 1932.

"HALF A TALE"

The Times places a good deal of emphasis on the reduction in money value of trade with the United States since Mr. Bennett came into power. Apparently, for some reason best known to itself, that newspaper is more concerned with the effects of Mr. Bennett's trade policy on the United States trade with us, than with any other country in the world, not excluding the British Empire. That it will be in the interests of the big American trusts, who appear to be the master of Mr. Macken'e King, to upset the Imperial Economic Conference to be held in Ottawa in July, is to be expected, and one may also anticipate that some newspapers will be paid to cause confusion, as was done by the big American armament manufacturers to upset the Naval Disarmament Conference a year or so ago. It is indeed necessary for all British Canadians, as well as all others who appreciate the important part Canada will play in the time to come in Imperial affairs, to "stand on guard for thee," at this time.

Now as The Times seem to like money values so much, as a guide to our welfare, perhaps it will explain these figures away.

In 1921 under the Conservative regime our trade with the United States was as follows:

In 1922, after Mr. Mackenzie King had come into power, our trade with the U.S.A. was, imports $515,958,196, and exports reduced to $292,588,643 or a total trade of $808,546,839. This is a fall of $589,952,948. Of course there was a deflation of values taking place then as there is now, but The Times seems to have a very elastic memory which, no doubt, is convenient for certain class of political newspaper writers.

It was also during this period that the Fordney Tariff came into effect which shut out over $100,000,000 of our exports to the United States, and which Mr. Mackenzie King and his Liberal supporters took lying down. Having the experience of the Fordney Tariff before them, and anticipating that Mr. Mackenzie King would be returned to power in 1930, our American "friends" in a truly "neighborly" manner put on the Smoot-Hawley tariff in 1930, which again Mr. Mackenzie King took like a "good boy." This Smoot-Hawley tariff was brought in by the United States with the blatantly announced intention of shutting out another $100,000,000 of Canadian exports to that country. The Times has found it convenient to forget to mention this as one of the reasons, apart from the deflation in values which is world wide, accounting for the reduction in our exports to our neighbors to the south of us. Mr. Bennett, however, has not taken it lying down, and his reply has been to deflect our imports from the United States to the British Empire and to those countries which "buy from us."

It has been claimed for Liberalism that it does not believe in tariffs, especially "high" tariffs. I have proved, on more than one occasion, that its acts generally belie its words.

In 1921 the average rate of import duty handed over to the Liberal Government of Mackenzie King by the Conservative Government was 20.6 per cent. In 1930, when Mr. Mackenzie King went out of power, the average rate of duty on all imports into Canada was 24.3 per cent, and at no time during the eight years of Liberal rule was the rate ever less than 22.9 per cent, which was in 1924.

Here is another bit of duplicity. At the last election the Liberals claimed that they stood for fostering trade with the British Empire. It is a pity that during the eight years they were in power, from 1922 to 1930, they never practised that policy. In 1921 when the Conservatives handed over power, the average duty on all imports from Great Britain was 16.6 per cent; but when Mr. Mackenzie King went out of power, in 1930, the average duty on all imports from Great Britain was 20 per cent. Since Mr. Bennett came into power this has been reduced 19.6 per cent.

When Mr. Mackenzie King went out of power in 1930 the average rate of duty on all imports from the United States was 14.4 per cent, but in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1931, under Mr. Bennett, the rate has been increased to 15.3 per cent.

Here is another item, illustrating the two men. Mr. Bennett does not shout British Empire, but said his first duty was to Canada, as it should be, and he practises what he said. Mr. Mackenzie King shouts "Empire," but his idea of Empire would appear to be the Empire of the United States, of which he would like to make Canada an adjunct.

In 1930 the percentage of goods admitted free into Canada was 21.4 per cent from Great Britain, and 38.2 per cent from United States. Since Mr. Bennett assumed power the percentage has been increased to 27.4 per cent imported free from Great Britain and 38.5 per cent from United States.

If ever actions spoke louder than words, the above sets of figures clearly show the policy of Mr. Bennett and of Mr. Mackenzie King. The former stands for the British Empire and the latter for the United States. H. HASTINGS.

$7.50 PER MONTH

Sir,—I must point out to you, and Mr. John Taylor, that my husband is a war veteran, in fact, a veteran of three wars, and is suffering from a disability for which he receives a pension of $7.50 per month. As this is hardly sufficient to support a family of six, he is forced into the labor market to compete with yonnger and stronger men.

I do think it is hard for a man who has given the greater part of his life in service to the Empire, and received his discharge, physically unfit for further service as a result of service, to find himself forced to seek relief to provide food for his family. He went before a tribunal last year, which gave a favorable decision. This was turned down at Ottawa.

I can assure you that had he been granted a 60 per cent pension he would not be seeking work when other men need it. Are all veterans' lives not of equal value? Evidently not, except when life is given up.
(MRS.) M. E. HUTCHISON.

BAYS DEFEAT CAFEMEN IN HOOP BATTLE

J.B.A.A. Downs Green Mill by 29-28 Score in City Basketball Loop

J.B.A.A. WOMEN AND RIBBONS VICTORIOUS

Rallying in the dying moments of the second half, J.B.A.A. sprung a surprise victory in the men's senior "C" division over Green Mill, first-half champs, last night in the Victoria and District Basketball League at the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium by a 29-28 score. J.B.A.A. women played fine combination to set back the strong Standard Steam Laundry quintette in a women's "B" fixture, 17-11, while Blue Ribbons walked all over the Bluebirds in the second women's attraction, 47-10.

The first contest was the feature attraction of the evening and it was only by a free shot in the last twenty seconds of the game that the J.B.A.A. managed to walk off the floor with a 29-28 victory over Green Mill.

Both teams played remarkably well and the whirlwind finish kept the spectators excited.

THRILLING GAME

The last contest, between the J.B.A.A. women and the Standard Steam Laundry, was packed with thrills from start to finish. But the Bays were right on their toes and their superior shooting ability enabled them to humble their hard-fighting opponents, 17-11. The winners obtained a lead early and managed to keep it throughout, although at times the Laundry team had a decided edge on the play.

Macedo refereed all games, and the teams were:

J.B.A.A. (men)—Scott (2), Acres (8), Burnett (2)), Bull (6), Taylor (5), Clark (6), Moses, Elliot.

Standard Steam Laundry — H. Scott (3), M. Carmichael (4), I. Foubister, V. Foubister (4), D. Kindle, N. Scott.

Strange Anachronisms Seen in Chinese Play

Diverting Entertainment by Visiting Cantonese Company Draws Crowds of Chinese Nightly to Local Theatre

A din, resembling nothing so much as the sound emitted by half-a-dozen riveting machines at work on a bridge or a modern skyscraper, drew a Colonist reporter a few evenings ago to the door of the Variety Theatre, Government Street, where a Chinese theatrical company, direct from Canton, China, was found in possession filling a three-weeks' engagement.

Man Sem Yuen, the manager, who doesn't speak a word of English, assembled his company in China. It comprises twenty-eight actors, some of whom are quite noted in their own country, especially To Sing Fe, the leading man, and Lao Seo Fong, the principal lady. They have beautiful costumes, elaborate after the Oriental fashion, with heavy silks and satins, richly embroidered, and some magnificent headdresses, which almost defy description. Contrary to the habit of some of the companies which came here in years gone by, the productions change every night.

IMPASSIVE ENTHUSIASM

To realize the heights of enthusiasm which the productions inspire in the patrons, one must know that the show begins at 7 o'clock and continues until some time after midnight. And there are full houses every night. These facts are also necessary before one can realize the muscular endurance of the orchestra, particularly of the cymbalist, who wields two enormous bronze discs, the size of big trays, almost without intermission throughout the evening.

The Chinese actresses have a particularly impassive and inscrutable expression. Nearly all the ladies in the present company are extremely pretty after the traditional fashion, with moon-shaped faces, long, almond-shaped eyes and pencilled brows, pale gold skins and jet black hair elaborately pomaded and dressed. Grace of gesture is characteristic of both men and women, no matter what their rank in the play.

One of the most interesting demonstrations of it was given by a comedian, who appeared in the part of a genial deep-sea demon. His ablutions, intentionally comical, broke down the stocial impassivity of the spectators, who laughed gleefully during the fifteen minutes he occupied the stage. Applause is evidently not a conventional necessity. None of the principals was applauded, but a nimble and powerful little gymnast, who gave a series of remarkable leaps and somersaults, was vociferously clapped.

EVERYTHING IN VIEW

There is no hypocrisy about the Chinese theatre. Everything there is to see, with the exception of the actual dressing-rooms, is out in full view. At the right of the stage, without any line of demarcation from the scene of the play, are the properties, arranged on tables and shelves. While three of the actresses, arranged in gorgeous embroideries befitting their character as princesses, chatted gaily in a garden about their lovers (presumably), one of the stagehands, apparently quite unnoticed by the spectators, nonchalantly entertained himself by trying on some of the fol-lols in the costume department. But stagehands wander on and off at will, sometimes on business, sometimes merely for curiosity. In either event, they are quite unconcerned about their appearance. Several times one evening one of them stood in the door back of the stage eating an apple while he watched the progress of the play.

Of the five instruments the above-mentioned great bronze symbals were the most important. Some extraordinary contortions were performed by the cymbalist in order to extort the maximum din from his instrument. Another man played a one-stringed violin, played in the position of a 'cello. Still another performer looked after some dry-sounding instruments, one of which, attacked with chopsticks, emitted a sound resembling grasshoppers hopping about in an empty barrel. Until the ear becomes accustomed to the sound, the ensemble has a crude and deafening dissonance, but gradually the Western ear can discover harmonies.

HIGH VOICES

The actresses all have very high-pitched voices, the prevailing note used being about E or F. The tone is thin, querulous, and monotonous. Men and boys, on the other hand, speak robustly. The impudent boy seems to be a favorite character, and has a licence of naughtiness which our stage would not tolerate. Whereas Chinese ladies, on the stage, at least, are almost invariably circumspect, conventional and unemotional as dainty porcelain figures, the male actors are allowed to give splendidly vigorous and human portrayals. Their comedy is broad, with a flair for vulgarity.

The audience must have superlative powers of concentration to be able to follow the play. Otherwise too much will be seen and countless anachronisms will spoil the story. A character from ancient Chinese history may occupy the boards. He may wish to wash his hands. He snaps his fingers peremptorily. But instead of a Chinese servant in ancient dress and a fine porcelain basin of classic design, there issues out of the background the prototype of the Chinese vegetable man, carrying a fifteen-cent shop granite bowl which he plumps unceremoniously before the mandarin or prince of the blood. The latter, however, glorifies the basin by the grand air with which he uses it—the laving being, of course, pure pantomime, but distinguished by all the graces of a Beau Brummel.

THE FURNISHINGS

The scenery for the next act will often be in course of preparation, in full view of the audience, while the last episodes of the current scene are being enacted on another part of the stage.

The curtain is a simple yet beautiful part of the fixtures. About thirty feet in length it is suspended from an ordinary clothes line above the footlights, but the gaiety of its broad stripes of parakeet green and Chinese yellow brightens the whole theatre. Above it hangs a broad band of pink satin embellished with ornamental Chinese characters.

Stage furnishings are few in number. Two chairs, one of scarlet satin embroidered with rampant dragons, another in a lovely shade of Pekin blue spangled with tiny mirrors and sequins, were the principal fixtures for two successive nights. Furnishings, however, are more often than not implied rather than shown.

THE AUDIENCE

An intimation that "No one will be admitted after the rise of the curtain" would be useless in a Chinese theatre. The audience is composed chiefly of men in working clothes. There may be a small sprinkling of women and children, the latter including infants-in-arms. But all, large and small, move about the theatre at will. There is never any deliberate interruption of the play, but no one allows the play to interfere with his own comfort. If one is bored one munches peanuts or sugar cane which he buys from the man in overalls who peddles his wares up and down the aisle.

The plays being presented are both classics and moderns. One of the classics tells the story of an emperor who has fallen in love with a girl of considerably lower caste. He even wants to marry her. But the girl doesn't love the king, and averts his attentions by giving him wine. When he is properly intoxicated, her friends come and carry her away. Another play tells the story of classical thieves who attempted to steal jewels and gold from a rich man. The plot takes one to an ancient nunnery, which is an interesting episode.

EXTOLS SPIRIT OF WESTERNERS

J. F. B. Livesay, Manager of Canadian Press, Pleased With Prairie Optimism

"What surprises one most in traveling through the West is the astonishing resolution of its people," said J. F. B. Livesay, general manager of the Canadian Press, who is visiting here after attending a meeting of the Western members in Vancouver last week.

"The optimism of the West is proverbial," he stated, "but the word 'optimism' is a misnomer. Optimism is the attitude of mind of the incorrigible offender who hopes to get a ticket of leave by good behavior.

"The confidence of the prairie farmer is something very different. It is based on history and experience. He knows he can produce better wheat at a lower price than anywhere else in the world, and that the world must still have wheat.

"True, in some parts of Saskatchewan this faith has been shaken by three years' drought, a unique experience, and farmers who have seen their top six inches blown over their neighbor's section have cause for despair. It is a simple fact they do not despair. They believe in the recuperative qualities of a soil that has never failed them yet.

PROSPECTS HOPEFUL

"Precipitation over these stricken areas has been fair. Given now some real Winter, with the healing frost biting deep into the parched land, followed by good Spring rainfalls, it is no miracle to expect a bumper crop.

"Unlike Ontario these gumbo lands do not depend upon the top six inches, but are fertile many feet.

"Talk about resolution! There are whole municipalities in Saskatchewan that have refused Government aid, saying they can look after themselves and will aid those among them who are destitute. That is the spirit that will once again pull the prairies through. You can't down your Western farmer. He has learned his lesson and never again will he present an open flank to a broken wheat market.

"He now conceives it his first duty to produce on his farm everything he needs to keep his family through a tight season.

DISCUSSES COAST

"Coming out to the Coast is, of course, a quite amazing experience," Mr. Livesay went on. "Vancouver, orientated to the Pacific, throbs with life. Two years have seen a marvelous growth, and if things are dull now, they are dull with the rest of the world and not from any inherent fault."

"How about Victoria? Is it not significant that Canadians who formerly went South for the Winter, are now coming here where they can get full value for their money? The call is pretty strong to a place where snowdrops are out in January."

While here, Mr. Livesay started on a new year. His many friends did not forget to honor his birthday, and his room in the Empress Hotel was made bright yesterday with numerous bouquets. To one who has as his hobby the growing of flowers, these were most acceptable.

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

HEADACHE

When you have a headache you are not greatly concerned as to its cause; are interested only in getting it relieved.

Did you ever try to think about the number of different causes for headache? There must be thirty at least.

Yet like every ailment in medicine, the wise thing to do in trying to locate the cause is to try to remember what is the most common or most frequent cause.

It may, of course, be due to eye strain, using the eyes without the help of glasses; from pressure from diseases of the nose and the sinuses adjoining the nose; to low or high blood pressure, which interfere with the nourishment of the brain; poisons from infected tonsils or teeth; or from an inflammation of the brain itself—meningitis.

However, as the commonest cause is some digestive order, it would be good sense to remember just what you have eaten during the previous twenty-four hours, as some headaches are due to pressure or intoxication arising in the stomach and sometimes in the small or large intestine, in which latter case the food may have been eaten many hours previously. When the headache occurs after midnight and causes you to lose sleep, it is often due to slowness or sluggishness of the liver.

Where the headache is on one side of the head, with a "sicky" feeling accompanying it, it is called migraine—one-sided headache. Although the cause of this is still under investigation in one of our large university clinics, many physicians are of the opinion that this type is due to a sluggishness of the liver, caused by overwork, mental or physical.

Many of these digestive headaches can be relieved by bending and twisting the body in an effort to expel gas from stomach and intestine. Sometimes the simple method of trying to "gulp," or raise gas from the stomach, gives instant relief.

The thought, then, is that as most headaches are due to digestive disorders, that you try to locate the cause in your particular case, and thus avoid them.

Having the eyes tested and proper glasses fitted will relieve another large group of sufferers.

MONKEY FLIES ACROSS OCEAN

First of the simians to cross the Atlantic by air is the little monkey which was presented to Bert Hinkler as he was about to begin his flight from Natal, Brazil, to Bathurst in Gambia, West Africa. The female monkey is a great pet of the airman, who says she will be his pal on many a journey. No one is happier than the monkey, who takes to joy riding in the air as blithely as a duck takes to the water. She sits in the pilot's seat, munching bananas, as if she had been flying all her life. When she descended proudly in Hinkler's arms at the Rabat flying field she and her master were welcomed by wildly enthusiastic crowds.

Salty Stories

By BO'SUN

"A Drop Too Much"

"Falling through space," said the sailmaker, "is the experience of few who live to tell the tale. Such was my experience on board the ship Alcester in the year 1895, while sailing under a five-knot breeze in the Indian Ocean, with royals set and the wind abeam. Being a light boy at the time, I sat astride the weather main upper topsail yardarm, assisting Long Ekstrom, the strongest and clumsiest sailor afloat, to take a turn out of the tergallant sheet. While exerting his great strength on the preventer lashing, it broke. He bumped me, and I was bumped off into space.

"That moment is burned indelibly into my brain, through which coursed plans of salvation with lightning speed. I thought of the horrible pulp I'd make when I hit the deck, and simultaneously remembered that the yards were checked in, sufficient for me to fall overboard, clear of the ship. And while the masts, rigging and billowing sails seemed to be shooting upward, I thought of all this before I passed the lower topsail yardarm in my descent. I clasped my hands above my head and spread out my legs to catch the wind, which pointed me head downwards and I struck the water in a vertical dive, a few feet from the ship's side.

"I shot deep down into the blue, just below the keel of the ship, and felt that I was alive and safe. While swimming to the surface, I saw the white hull sailing by, saw the draft numerals, the rudder, and reached the surface to find a lifebuoy at hand, and heard the sailors singing out as they backed the main yard, and I was taken on board.

"'When you left that yardarm, said the captain, 'you spread out your arms and legs and actually flew; and I am convinced that flying in the near future will be an accomplished fact.'"

WINDS WERE UNFAVORABLE

AGUA CALIENTE, Mexico, Jan. 23 (AP).—Capt. Frank M. Hawks landed his speedy monoplane here at 5:55:16 o'clock tonight, completing his round-trip, three-flag flight to Vancouver, B.C., in 13 hours, 44 minutes. He was given a great cheer by 400 spectators as he set the plane down on the short runway.

Hawks made the northward flight, after starting from here at 4:11:15 o'clock this morning, in 6 hours, 50 minutes, 45 seconds, and, after turning back at the Vancouver airport, returned here in a little more than 6 hours, 53 minutes.

The flight was the first to be completed in one day from Mexico to Canada and back to Mexican soil. Going north, Hawks was shooting at the 6 hours, 42 minutes, 15 seconds record for a one-way, trination flight set six weeks ago by Jimmy Wedell, New Orleans aviator, but he missed it by eight and one-half minutes. Coming back he was eleven minutes over Wedell's northbound record.

APPEARED TIRED

At the landing here, which was made after Hawks had circled the field four times, the pilot seemed very tired.

"I'm disappointed in my time," Hawks said. "The weather was clear, but the winds weren't favorable. Going north I had head winds and coming back the wind had veered until it struck the side of the ship."

Bill Would Be Inimical to the Merchant Marine

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23 (AP).—Describing it as "inimical to the best interest of the American merchant marine," the Shipping Board today informed the Senate immigration committee of its disapproval of a bill to strengthen bars against aliens entering the country as seamen.

Witnesses representing several shipping organizations contended the inspection and deportation provisions of the law would work a hardship on the American and foreign shipping lines and would not prevent illegal entries.

TUG SHIFTED BY SALVORS

Kyuquot Now Lying in Quiet Water—Will Come to Esquimalt

The Pacific Salvage Company yesterday added another mark to its great record on this Coast, when Superintendent Bert Frankworth and his salvage crew shifted the sunken tug Kyuquot from her exposed position in Porlier Pass to a sheltered bay nearby. The Kyuquot, largest and most powerful tugboat of the Canadian Pacific Railway transfer service, struck and sank in Porlier Pass on November 11, resting finally forty feet below the surface. The Pacific Salvage Company undertook the salvage of the craft on the "no-cure-no-pay" basis, and has worked for the past two months on the job.

The Kyuquot lay on rocky bottom, badly listed, in waters which were almost constantly disturbed by heavy tides. Snow, hail, sleet and heavy winds added to the difficulties. In fixing slings to bring the vessel upright, in order to lift her and float her into sheltered water, it was necessary for divers to blast a tunnel under the ship in order to fit the midship sling. This was accomplished a fortnight ago. Since then work has been delayed by continuous bad weather, which culminated in a gale early this week.

Yesterday morning, it was reported the Kyuquot had been shifted to sheltered waters in a bay close by, with shelving beach, up which the vessel will be stepped on successive tides until she is in a position where patches can be put on the holes in her hull and she can be pumped out. When ready, she will be brought to Esquimalt and dry-docked. At the present time, the tugboat is in forty feet of water.

TRAVERSED SILVER SEA

Unusual Phenomenon Witnessed by Passengers on Australia-Bound Liner

Passengers by the Oriental Company's Ss. Orsova, reaching London in late November, describe an extraordinary phenomenon which they witnessed in the Arabian Sea in September while on their way to Australia.

Shortly after sunset the ocean appeared to become milky white and luminous. For an hour only a dull glow was noticed, but from 8 o'clock until 11 o'clock the whole of the ocean took on a pallid, luminous appearance, gradually brightening until the sea appeared to have turned completly white, while on the horizon dark clouds presented a sudden contrast with the rippling, silvery water.

Occasionally dense masses of marine undergrowth appeared on the surface and immediately become phosphorescent, the glow increasing until the whole was a mass of shimmering white. When this occurred the ship appeared to be passing silver islands on a luminous sea.

"It was an eerie experience," said one of the passengers. "The strange beauty of it fascinated all of us, and none felt that he could go to bed while it lasted.

DISPELLED BY MOON

"It was not until the moon appeared that the sea regained its normal appearance and we could tear our eyes away from it. It was almost a relief when the phenomenon disappeared."

Officers of the ship lowered boats over the side and collected quantities of the sea water, which, close at hand, seemed to be in every way normal.

It was stated later than an earthquake had been recorded at Indian observatories at the time the phenomenon was witnessed.

Museum authorities stated that the phosphorescence was undoubtedly due to a minute sea organism, which became luminous in certain circumstances.

The earthquake possibly assisted the display, causing the release of immense masses of seaweed from the ocean floor. On reaching the surface they were covered by the organisms and began to shine.

Flyers Making Short Jumps on Western Flight

HEARST, Jan. 23 (CP).—Jarl Grubbstrom and W. H. Cross, attempting a transcanada flight from Montreal to Victoria, B.C., landed here at 5 o'clock this evening, two hours after they had taken off from Cogama, Ont., 160 miles southeast of here. The flyers experienced heavy weather, falling snow forcing them to fly low.

THE LOVE TAX

A Story of Fate and a Girl's Grey Eyes

By ROYAL BROWN
Illustrated by J. H. Hammon

LOVE is a funny thing, Priscilla Trent had been known to Brick Valentine if not all his life—he was six years older—at least most of hers. He had seen her being pushed through Lyemouth's sleepy, elm-shaded streets in her perambulator when she was mostly rosy cheeks and big eyes, but that had caused him no thrill. At seven, babies were nothing in Brick's life.

Nor had subsequent encounters, through the following years, caused him anything that remotely suggested the most celebrated or cardiac disorders. That was not to come until February, 1931, when Brick paused in Lyemouth for the briefest of visits. He was twenty-eight and it was his first glimpse of the town in eleven years.

"I wonder if Ed's still alive," thought Brick.

He brought his small coupe to a standstill at the curb, swung into the drug store. There was Ed Tucker. Bald now, and wearing spectacles.

Brick grinned. "Remember me?"

The druggist did instantly. "Do I?" he said feelingly. "The time you and—"

"Why bring that up?" protested Brick. "A lemon and lime, please."

Ed produced a glass; the fountain made sounds.

"Still in the navy?" he asked.

Brick shook his head. "Three years was a-plenty."

"Traveling for a living?" he asked.

"I get around," retorted Brick.

Ed realized he had not changed much. He had always been a close-mouthed youngster and a holy terror. A bad egg, John Trent—Priscilla's father—had called him. That abruptly reminded Ed of something.

"Remember when you put the bad egg in a snowball?"

"And let old man Trent have it?" Brick supplemented. "I sure do." He set his glass down. "That old bird still running the town?"

Ed hesitated.

"I get you," said Brick succinctly.

Ed doused the glass. "Back in town to stay?"

"Me? Not in this town. I just happened to be passing and—"

And then Priscilla Trent came into the drug store—sixty-four inches of her including three-inch heels. And there you have what men call Fate! For if she hadn't come in at that precise instant, it might have been eleven years more before Brick saw Lyemouth again. She gave him a swift glance from her grey eyes and—well, that's how Fate works sometimes.

Brick did not recognize her. When he was seventeen she was a negligible eleven, with her blond hair in pigtails. No memory he had of her suggested the achievement that was Priscilla at twenty-two.

But she recognized him at once. Nor was it just that memorable red head that identified him. At twenty-eight, Brick, with his audacious blue eyes, was not so different from the town bad boy she remembered—the one her father had sworn to send to the reformatory.

One of Priscilla's earliest memories of her father was his spreading ashes of a Saturday night on the hill where Lyemouth youngsters coasted. "They will not desecrate Sunday," he had grimly assured her perturbed mother.

It was that which had begun the ridiculous vendetta between Lyemouth's most influential citizen and one of its smallest, most insignificant urchins. Brick might not have been able to stop John Trent when he strewed ashes but he was adept at reprisals. Not only snowballs with bad eggs, but gates that disappeared on Hallowe'en, comic valentines.

"I'll thrash him within an inch of his life!" Priscilla's father raged. But Brick was an agile youngster.

Priscilla was but eleven on that Fourth of July eve when the barn had burned to the ground, but she had never forgotten her father's rage; his instant conviction that he could place his fingers on the culprit.

"But how do you know it was he?" her mother had asked timidly, and been flattened, as she so often was by the storm that was diverted toward her. Even at eleven, Priscilla knew that no matter who was responsible for her father's swift, consuming rages it was always her hapless mother who suffered most.

A warrant had been sworn out charging Brick, aged seventeen, with arson. But Brick had vanished. Weeks later Lyemouth heard he was in the navy.

"That's a good place for him," John Trent had said grimly. "If he ever steps foot in this town again I'll see he is clapped into jail."

That had been in 1920. Now it was 1931—and there was Brick Valentine standing by the soda fountain.

To Brick, that February afternoon, Priscilla might suggest pure glamour, but to her he suggested only trouble; the sure incitement to her father's growing habit of wrath.

Brick turned to Ed the minute Priscilla left.

"Local girl?" he asked.

Ed gave him a glance. "Are you kidding me?"

"Kidding you? You mean it's somebody I should know? I don't—if I had I would have spoken."

"I saw you didn't. But I thought there was a reason. Don't you know her father said he'd send you to the reformatory if you ever stepped in town again?"

Brick grinned. "I doubt if there was anybody good enough for her—but see who's come back!"

"Say," Ed demanded, "aren't you forgetting a lot? Her father—"

"Has he still got you all buffaloed?" Brick asked.

"I'm not saying anything," said Ed. But, glancing around to be sure nobody was in earshot, he added, "I'll give you a tip, though. He's going to buy in your Aunt Hetty's cottage for back taxes."

"Hasn't that been sold for taxes yet?" asked Brick. He considered. Then, "I think I'll run out and take a look at the place. I might pay the taxes—settle down."

"But you said you were just passing through."

And Then Priscilla Trent Came Into the Drug Store. And There You Have What Men Call Fate!

"A lot can happen in a few minutes," Brick reminded him.

Now there were several reasons why he shouldn't have said that. One in particular was that a drug store like Ed's is a clearing house for town gossip. Besides, Ed was married.

"Brick Valentine—that imp?" echoed Ed's wife when she dropped in a few minutes later. "He isn't back for good?"

"I don't know. He said that he was just passing through. Then Priscilla Trent came in and—"

Ed's wife was on her way. Paul Revere minus a horse and plus skirts.

PRISCILLA'S father handled real estate, mortgages and insurance. He had his office at home. At five o'clock every afternoon he went to the post office for his mail. At five-fifteen this February afternoon he returned, his face dark with wrath.

"What's this I hear about Brick Valentine?" he demanded harshly.

Priscilla all but gaped. What had he heard?

"I'm sure I don't know," she said.

"You mean to say you don't know your name is all over town; that he—he told Ed Tucker he intended to settle here and marry you?"

Priscilla's eyes widened incredulously. "Stay here? Marry me?" she echoed. "Either he is crazy—or Ed Tucker is. I did happen into the drug store when he was there—"

"What did you say to him?"

"Not a word!" Priscilla spoke swiftly. "It's just some ridiculous joke," she said. "I can assure you that Brick Valentine is about the last man I'd dream of marrying."

She believed that then and her father could not help believing her. But the violence of his emotion demanded an outlet.

"That's fortunate," he commented curtly. "Just so long as you stay under my roof, are dependent on me—"

Priscilla bit her lip, let him finish. There were many things she would have liked to say in answer. But it certainly would be foolish to let Brick be an issue. She doubted that she would ever see him again. She knew from what her father said that he had left town. Would he come back? Priscilla hoped not, believed not—for twenty-four hours.

Then Brick's roses—there was no card but who else would have sent them?—came by express in a great florist's box. Talisman roses, dozens of them, according to the report that ran through the edified town. Actually, there were two dozen. Priscilla hastily gathered them up. Fortunately, her father wasn't home. If he should hear—

The minute he returned, Priscilla knew she had been wise.

"Throw those flowers in the ash barrel," he commanded.

"They are already there," Priscilla said sc—ly.

That checked him. "I'll put a stop to his monkey business," he announced furiously. "I'll tell him—"

"Oh, have you his address?" asked Priscilla. Nobody in Lyemouth had. There had been none with the check Brick sent to pay back taxes on the property that had once been his Aunt Hetty's and was now his.

"I got a long-distance call asking how much they amounted to," the tax collector had explained uneasily to Priscilla's father, the chief assessor

Then, in late February, the town received another thrill. "They're putting a stone on Hetty Valentine's grave," ran the report. Comment on that was characteristic of Lyemouth. "The way he always acted, poor Hetty needs a stone—to keep her from turning over in her grave," was the gist of it.

No one in Lyemouth knew that Brick, misrepresenting his age in order to enlist in the navy, had allotted part of his meager pay to his aunt. And no one in Lyemouth guessed all that lay behind his impulse to pay back taxes and mark her grave. That had been born that February afternoon when, leaving Ed Tucker, he had driven across the salt marshes to the old cottage.

The soft sunshine had been tender, but the old place looked disreputable. The trellises that had held his aunt's prized roses were awry; shingles were loose. Brick entered through a broken window. Dust lay heavily everywhere. A chair had been broken; some things were missing. He moved to the kitchen and here, abruptly, his aunt became a vivid memory. Here she had baked the pies and cakes, fried the doughnuts and modeled the cookies she sold to help pay expenses.

"Did you wipe your feet?" had been her inevitable greeting whenever he came in. When he asked for a doughnut or cooky, her reply was an invariable: "Go away. Don't tease me." Then she'd move around, aloof, forbidding, until suddenly, "Oh take this and clear out!" she'd snap, handing him a doughnut or some cookies.

From the time he had been three until he had run away he had lived with her. In all those years there had never been a caress. "But that was just the New England of it," Brick had suddenly realized that February afternoon. And abruptly an impulse had crystallized into a decision.

"Tim will howl," he had thought.

Tim had. Tim was his partner.

"How do you get that way?" demanded Tim. "We agreed to pinch pennies, and now you spring this."

"I'm sorry, Tim. I can't help it," replied Brick. "It's a debt of honor. I—well, I can't imagine Aunt Hetty happy even in Heaven if she can see that place. I've got to fix it up—and I might as well tell you that I'm going to put a stone on her grave, too."

He had his way. He usually did. He and Tim had met in the navy and had been partners now for eight years through many ventures. They had worked as electricians. After that they had run a wayside stand. There Tim had got an idea for an electric hot-dog steamer. Brick had promptly matched him with a utility grill. Both were being manufactured now on a royalty basis.

Their big dream was a factory to manufacture their own products. It was for the factory that they were saving. Tim, however, was quite unprepared for the idea Brick shot at him one morning toward the end of February.

"Build the factory now?" he gasped. "A swell time. Hard times to begin with, and we haven't the money."

"Leave it to me. If I can't raise the money—"

"Well, even if you can, why is Lyemouth the place?"

"If they guess what you want it for you'll have to sing like Caruso."

"We'll handle it through an agent," persisted Brick.

"Well, I'll think it over."

"Look it over," amended Brick. "We'll run up to my mansion for the week-end."

TOWARD evening all Lyemouth knew that Brick Valentine was back in town with another man. There were lights in the windows of the long-deserted cottage.

Priscilla also knew that Brick was back in town. The roses still appeared regularly, and were always promptly consigned to the ash barrel.

"But I'll put a stop to that," she promised herself.

The next morning, after breakfast, she jammed a hat over her bright hair. She had made up her mind to call on Brick Valentine in her little roadster.

The roadster came to a stop outside Brick's cottage. Priscilla felt her knees go weak. That made her angry. She blew her horn viciously.

Brick appeared. He spoke before she did. He was saying: "I hope I'm awake. This seems like a dream, an awfully nice dream!"

"I heard you were here," she said primly. "And I've just come to tell you, you—you simply must stop."

Brick registered bland innocence. "Stop what?"

"You know very well," retorted Priscilla, losing her primness. "You—your flowers make me conspicuous. The whole town is talking."

"Oh, gosh! I never thought of that," apologized Brick. "I'm awfully sorry. I just wanted you to have them."

"You won't send any more, then?"

"Not without your permission."

"Thank you," she said, and nodded farewell.

Brick looked alarmed. "Won't you stay just a minute?" he pleaded. "Tim and I—"

"Tim?" echoed Priscilla.

"My partner," explained Brick. "We are going to fix this place up."

"You don't mean you're coming back to Lyemouth to live!"

"I might—eventually." He glanced at her, caught something in her eye and added, "Have you any objections?"

"I haven't. But I'm afraid Father has."

Priscilla said nothing.

"I'll try to live down my reputation," he went on hopefully; "become a credit to the town. Perhaps you'd be willing to know me if I do?"

Priscilla had to say something. "It—It isn't I," she reiterated. "I don't think you can guess how Father hates you." Her voice stumbled oddly. "We can't be friends if—if that is what you mean." A curious panic possessed her. "Good-bye," she said desperately.

Brick watched her go, then went indors.

"Yeh!" said Tim. "So that's what all this talk about Lyemouth's being a swell place for the factory goes back to!"

"I suppose you've got it all bought by now?" suggested Tim sarcastically.

Brick grinned at him. "Is anything I say to be used against me? I hear there's an old warrant out for me."

The chief also grinned. "I hear you're a hard ticket," he admitted, but he produced no warrant. Instead, he glanced around. "Plan to fix this place up?"

Brick nodded.

"Could you use a couple of good men?"

Brick shook his head. "I'm handy with hammer and saw," he explained. "And this ape here"—he nodded at Tim—"can turn out an honest day's work if you keep riding him. I figured we'd fix the place during spare time. Why?"

"Just wondered," explained the chief. "I know two good men who need work pretty bad. One of them has three kids and his wife is in the hospital."

"Oh, gosh, can that stuff," Brick besought. Then, "Tell him to come around some time today and I'll give him a job—and the other fellow, too."

The chief thanked him and departed. And so, by noon, Lyemouth had two more choice bits of gossip. The first was that Priscilla had been seen at Brick's. The other news was that two of Lyemouth's unemployed had found jobs.

They worked steadily through March and by the first of April the place was transformed. "They're swell electricians, Brick and his partner," one of the workers informed all hands. "You wouldn't believe the things they've put in that house. It looks like a million dollars."

Priscilla's father paused there one day in early April, peered in the windows. But he went as chief assessor—and he smiled a thin, satisfied smile.

In early April, Priscilla's father had much to be pleased with. That lot up at the station, for instance, assessed at only $1,500. He had bought it because he had a mania for real estate. Now somebody wanted it badly. The report was that it was to be used for a factory site. Ed Tucker so informed Brick one day.

"What's holding it up?" remarked Brick, who knew.

"John Trent, mostly," replied Ed, "Give him an idea anybody wants anything of his and he'll take his time squeezing the last penny out of them."

"Any idea what he's asking?" asked Brick, still fishing.

"No. But I'll bet it's plenty. I wouldn't be surprised if he were holding out for ten or twelve thousand."

Brick knew John Trent was asking for the property, not ten or twelve thousand, but thirty.

"If you empower me to offer him eighteen, I think he will accept it," the agent who was handling the matter had written Brick and Tim.

"Over my dead body," Tim had said.

"There's no hurry," said Brick.

AND so April became May. The old apple tree outside the kitchen window burst into bloom, a miracle of beauty. Tim found Brick staring out at it one Sunday afternoon.

"You look as if you were in love," gibed Tim. "And speaking of love, that old coot's daughter just drove by—the one who is holding us up."

"Which way did she go?"

"Toward the beach . . . Hey, where are you going?"

Spring was in the air; in the old apple tree; in Brick. It was in Priscilla, too, though she would have scorned the idea.

Four o'clock of a Sunday afternoon was always the time when her spirits reached their lowest ebb. Today, she was filled with consuming restlessness. She felt as if nothing ever happened, nothing ever would happen. At least she could drive down to the beach, park her car and sit in the lee of a sand dune.

"Do you sometimes feel like committing suicide on Sunday afternoon?" he asked abruptly.

"Sometimes," she confessed.

He dropped down beside her. Color was being assembled in the sky against the coming sunset.

Brick did most of the talking, and no matter what he said his voice was wooing her, insidiously. But that she pretended to ignore.

The sunset faded; the air grew chill. Priscilla said she must go. And to that interlude there was no more than that.

It occurred to her that she had better not go to the beach again when Brick was in town. And for two successive Sunday afternoons she held to that decision and wondered if he had looked for her there. On the third she discovered he had.

Brick was there beyond the dunes. "I'd hoped that this was a favorite spot of yours—and I'd begun to wonder if I'd spoiled it for you," he said

They sat on the sand, exquisitely conscious of each other.

"I love the sea," Priscilla heard herself say idiotically.

"So do I," he said.

"Was that why you joined the navy?"

Brick grinned. "Partly. And I wanted to see the world."

"A girl in every port?" she suggested.

"That old legend dies hard," commented Brick. "Actually, I saw very little of the world. A modern battleship is really a floating machine shop. I came ashore a first-class electrician."

"That's what you do now, isn't it?"

"Not exactly. What I do wouldn't interest you."

"But it does," Priscilla assured him.

So Brick told her all about himself. What he and Tim were doing; what they hoped to achieve.

Priscilla, even hungrier for life than for romance, was thrilled.

"I know I have an awful reputation in Lyemouth," Brick concluded, "but I do hope to live it down, prove I'm not such a bad egg."

The metaphor broke the spell. Priscilla came to her feet quickly.

"I know you're not," she said.

Brick rose, loomed over her. It was almost dusk now. In all that Brick had said he had not in words included her. But now, abruptly, all that he had not said seemed to enclose them.

Priscilla did not move. She did not even try to evade him when he reached for her. She knew that he would kiss her, And she let him kiss her.

Finally she spoke. "You mustn't. I shouldn't have let you. It just can't be," she said wretchedly. "You know Father."

"I do. I know I'm a thorn in his flesh," replied Brick. "But I didn't burn the barn—honestly. It was somebody who got in there drunk—old Timmins, remember him? I ducked because I didn't want to have to testify against the old chap."

"It isn't just the barn. It's—oh, everything. He hates you."

"Well, we'll just have to make him change his mind."

Priscilla shook her head hopelessly. "He never, never will. And I couldn't leave Mother unless he did. He'd make life miserable for her."

"Couldn't she live with us?"

"She wouldn't leave him."

"Why not—if he's as bad as you say?"

"He has flattened all the life and spirit out of her, but she won't even admit it. She says I don't understand him—that he loves us. That he's generous. Generous! Mother's hardly been out of Lyemouth all her life. Now she wants awfully to go to Florida. She hates Winters here in Lyemouth. She isn't very strong and Doctor Thomas says Florida would be wonderful for her. But she won't go without Father."

"Why not?" asked Brick, puzzled.

Priscilla could only shrug her shoulders. That was one of life's riddles as far as she was concerned.

THE Summer waxed and waned. September came. Priscilla knew her father must know she was seeing Brick. But he never said a word.

October came; the tax bills went out. Brick got his.

"And your sweet and indulgent sire has soaked me to the tune of four hundred and ninety dollars, based on a fourteen-thousand-dollar valuation on my place," Brick informed Priscilla.

"Fourteen thousand dollars?" echoed Priscilla. "Why—why, our own place is valued at only thirty-five hundred."

"So I've discovered," said Brick. "I begin to suspect your father is trying to squeeze me out of town. The tax is confiscatory." He managed a grip, though, as he added, "Or perhaps it's just a tax on love, a super-tax, I'd say!"

"What are you going to do?"

"I don't know. I've seen a lawyer, I can appeal to the county commissioner or take it to court, but the lawyer didn't sound optimistic."

"But there must be something you can do," persisted Priscilla.

"Let the place go for taxes? Nobody but a fool would buy it at its present valuation."

It was Saturday afternoon and they were back in their old trysting spot, between the sand dunes and the sea.

"I've got one idea. There's a man in town I'd like to talk to," Brick said. "It may take an hour, but I'll know where I stand. Will you wait for me here?"

Priscilla nodded. She did not ask him who the man was. She never dreamed it might be her father. She would have been appalled. Brick knew that and he felt guilty, but he could not see any other move. Priscilla's father had used his office to wield a club. Well, Brick had a club to wield, too.

"Why didn't you tell me that in the first place?" his lawyer had demanded. "If that land you want for your factory is assessed at fifteen hundred and he's asking thirty thousand for it you can force a reassessment and make him pay plenty of back taxes. Suggest that to him and if he doesn't see reason—"

"Too darned much like blackmail," Brick had protested.

"Blackmail my neck! You're just doing to him what he is trying to do to you."

To Brick that sounded like sense—aside from Priscilla. But he hated to do it.

He was so uneasy and preoccupied by what lay ahead that when he reached the Trent home he hardly noticed two cars standing there. At any other time he would have realized that one was Doc Thomas' and the other bore the insignia of the District Nurses' Association.

THE TIDE OF SPRING

By ALMA and PAUL ELLERBE

JONATHAN Mayhew III was all rolled up with the yeast of youth. He was cashier and runner-up for president of the Longfield National Bank but this May morning that seemed to him an unmitigated curse due solely to the activities of Jonathan Mayhew I, who had founded that admirable institution and thus prepared the way. There, however, Jonty was wrong. He was, it might as well be admitted, a natural-born banker. Does that make him less romantic? It's just as well; he was romantic enough.

Yeast won't operate if you keep it cold and on the whole they'd kept Jonty pretty cold—"they" being mostly Carolyn, his elder half-sister, who had taken the place of the mother whom Jonty had never known. Jonty lived with Carolyn and her husband Charles, but it was Jonty's house.

Charles was sitting at the breakfast table with Jonty and Carolyn when the yeast of youth began to rise but presently he folded his paper and kissed the air above his wife's head and went away. Jonty sighed with relief.

AND then he happened to look at Carolyn's hand. For the first time in his life Jonty saw his sister's hand, is it came groping from behind the morning paper for a piece of toast. It was the kind of hand, he thought, which could never of its own exertions have fed its owner. It achieved toast solely because toast was where toast had always been; and Jonty spread out a hand of his own and saw that, too.

"Good Lord!" said he. "It might be made of muslin!"

"What might?" asked Carolyn.

Jonty held out his hand. "This," he said

She stared. "It's the typical Mayhew hand," she said. "It's like mine."

"Exactly," said Jonty, "and it has never picked up anything that somebody else hadn't put down right under it!"

"The Mayhews have always been—er—conservators," she said vaguely. "You're one yourself."

"So's the padlock on the barn!" said Jonty and rose to go.

"You won't forget we're dining tonight with Millicent?"

They dined with Millicent once a week—unless Millicent dined with them. And there were drives and dances and bridge parties and movies with Millicent, and he (and everyone else) supposed that one of these days he was going to take her to wife, as Carolyn had picked up the toast, as Charles had picked up Carolyn, because she was there under his hand. And he supposed they'd call it love and try to live on it until death did them part.

"I can't go tonight, Carrie," he said gently and bent and gave her one of his rare kisses. "Be a good scout and make an excuse for me, will you? I—I'm going to do something else." And he stepped out into the tide of Spring.

What he wanted to do was some fantastic unscheduled thing that no Mayhew had ever done before . . . What he did was to take the morning train for New York and Jimmy Darnley . . .

Having arrived he stopped in at a telegraph office and informed Carolyn and the bank that he had been called away for a day or two on urgent business.

All Mayhews went automatically to the Gotham. The current Jonathan of the line remained normal until the familiar building caught his eye and then, "Why the Gotham?" he thought. "I might as well have stayed at home!" Jimmy had a spare couch and could put him up. He'd been planning to stay a while with Jimmy ever since they left college.

Now Jimmy's was well over in the west 'teens, which is another world; above a second-hand furniture store, an employment agency, two embroidery factories and a magazine writer; away up at the top and back of everything; under an enormous skylight; a huge room where coals glowed in the grate and dogs lay about.

Jimmy'd be there if the dogs hadn't pulled him out of town: the three of them on a leash straining on ahead and Jimmy ranging after, with his pipe between his teeth and a bit of a tent strapped to his shoulders. The dogs got restless now and then and had to be taken to the country. People would let Jimmy camp who never let anyone else. And Jimmy painted and was content.

Jonty set echoes loose by banging on the door that shut in the foot of the fifth flight, which led only to Jimmy's place.

WHEN the dogs were at home they all gave tongue together at the first knock and Jimmy got up and pressed the clicker and let you in.

The clicker jumped three times but there was no reassuring yelp. Jonty swung the door open and stood looking up. When Jimmy was there you could see his big rumpled head with the skylight behind it. And there was a head there now; but it wasn't rumple. The silhouette it made was a feminine as a thimble and as delicate as a katydid.

"Is Mr. Darnley out?" said Jonty.

"Yes; he's out of town. And he won't be back until tomorrow morning. Would you like to leave any word?"

She took a step downward as if to keep him from coming in, but Jonty didn't notice.

"No," he said dolefully, continuing to climb. "Hang it all, I wanted to see him! I've got a holiday and I wanted to see him—well, uncommonly."

The girl laughed but with constraint. "I'm sorry, but since you don't want to leave a message there doesn't seem to be anything else I can do about it, does there?" And she took another downward step.

This time Jonty noticed it. "She doesn't want me to come up," he thought, but he thought it back behind thoughts of his own hard luck, and he said to her with only a vague realization of its implications, "I was going to make him put me up. Hotels are so darned dull. I wonder if I couldn't stay here anyway . . .

The moment the words were out of his mouth he wished he hadn't said them for a startled little gasp came down to him out of the dusk. There was a moment's dead pause and then he blundered on impulsively before she could speak;

"I—er—I'm Jonathan Mayhew—one of his oldest friends—roomed with him at college and all that. I work in a bank up-state, and this morning I had an awful attack of boredom at the breakfast table and all of a sudden I shot off at a tangent and came down here just to talk to Jimmy. If you know anything at all about him," he added confidingly, "you know there are times when only Jimmy will do."

Jonty was nice when he was confiding. He made it carry, even in the dark. She acknowledged that by another laugh. A slightly troubled laugh that wanted to be confiding, too, but was a little uneasy.

"I'm a Jimmyite," she admitted; "and what you say is true."

BUT he did wish he had had the sense of ten-year-old boy! What kind of a situation had he blundered into with his heavy-footed stupidity? He must clear things up somehow, even if he had to make them worse first.

"Won't you let me come up for just a minute and prove that I'm not an imposter? I can show you the plank Jimmy keeps his money under, and give you the names of all three of his dogs and tell you the story of how he got the old cutlass he pokes the fire with, and a lot of things like that. And then I'll pop right off again if you want me to."

This time her steps were upward and her laugh more free. "Come in," she said.

When they emerged from the half dark into Jimmy's well-lit room she said, "There's no reason why you shouldn't stay if you want to; but since I'm sort of in charge while Jimmy's away, I thought I'd better see you before I said so."

Was it his imagination which made him feel that it was just a little too good an imitation of casualness? Somehow he still felt there was a reason why he shouldn't stay. Could it be that Jimmy had fallen from bachelorhood and wasn't quite ready yet to acknowledge it? It wasn't like him and yet—anybody'd fall for this girl, Jonty thought, she was such a peach!

SHE wasn't pretty but quite charmingly different. The quality of aliveness that had dropped down to him in her tones lay over her like an aura and inhered in the very texture of her clothes. She was so delightfully unlike Millicent McCollister's starched and conventional perfections. Maybe if she was Jimmy's wife he could make her see that she'd be safe enough in telling him. Anyhow, he'd try. And if she wasn't Jimmy's wife . . . ! His heart gave a funny little buck.

"Do you know Jimmy well?"

"Yes, very. We come from the same little town out West. He lets me work here sometimes when he's away, because I live in a hall bedroom where the light is bad. I write"—she waved her hand toward many sheets of paper and a traveling typewriter—"book reviews and that sort of thing. All of it unsigned," she said grimly.

"Is it—er—a satisfactory indoor sport?"

"It might be, if—do you know what people get for unsigned book reviews?"

"I don't know anything," he admitted, "about art in any form."

"Five dollars each."

"Ho-o-lee cats!"

"Exactly. My name is Lucy Levlin," she added quickly, reading his thoughts; "and I'm not married to Jimmy and I'm not going to be."

"I'm darned glad to hear it!" he said with an emphasis that made her withdraw a little bit.

"Why?"

"Because Jimmy's not the marrying kind. He was born to go it alone."

"That's true," she said slowly. "I don't believe any girl in the world could be happy with him for long. But do you know I think it's just because of the way he feels about money. If he'd ever had any it might have been different, but since he hasn't he's taught himself to believe that it's not of the slightest importance. I think that even yet if he were to earn enough to live on, his feeling would change. And that he'd probably marry. Yes, and make somebody a good husband. I really do. But his pictures are too good and not quite good enough, and he never will. I feel pretty strongly about it because I have seen him going without so much that he needs."

Was she, Jonty wondered, one of the things that she thought Jimmy needed? Had they been in love and talked it out and forgone their paradise for the lack of money?

"Look here," he said, "won't you come out to lunch with me and tell me all about it? I'm so respectable and proper that it hurts! Asking you like this is the most unconventional thing any Mayhew has done since they quit killing Indians. I could get forty people to introduce me to you but what's the use? Please say you'll come! Won't you?"

She smiled. "Why, of course, I will. I know all about you—Jimmy's told me. And I've never been invited to lunch so earnestly in my life. I'd love to."

JONTY considered the next eleven hours the most important he had ever spent.

They lunched on food that was sheer poetry. Then they rode miles and miles in a victoria through Never Never Land. Alighting they looked down upon a river that must have been the Hudson, but wasn't to Jonty. They dined in Bagdad and went on afterward into Heaven, which people round about seemed to think was a musical comedy.

But when it was all over and he was taking her downtown in a taxi to her rooming house, he had learned nothing more of Lucy Devlin's relationship to his friend.

They stopped at Jimmy's place to get her book review which she wished to mail that night.

"I'll get it for you," Jonty said.

"Thanks, but you couldn't. It's scattered all over the room. Besides, I want to tidy up a bit since Jimmy's coming back in the morning. Don't bother to come up. I'll be right down again."

But he followed her because he didn't like the idea of trusting her to the half dark halls alone; and stuck the stamps on the envelope while she folded the manuscript and put her traveling typewriter into its case.

He started down ahead of her illuminating that first darkest flight with his cigarette lighter. They were halfway down the second flight when she said, "Oh, do wait just a minute, will you? The least I can do for you after such a corking day is to change the sheets in Jimmy's bed. I nearly forgot all about it."

"Someday I'm Coming to You and Ask You to Marry Me," Said Jonty.

"It's no bother; and I want to." And she was gone and the door had closed after her. The slight final noise it made surprised him. He distinctly remembered that there was no spring on it to make it shut like that. He went back and turned the knob. It had locked itself. He knew she had closed it to keep him out.

He told himself that he thought nothing of it as he stood there waiting patiently until she returned and let him in.

"What an outrageous way to treat you! There's a draft through here that's always slamming that door and I never do remember it!"

He wanted not to notice whether there was a draft or not, but there really wasn't.

And she hadn't given the covers of Jimmy's bed a single tug. "I'm trying to find the son," he told himself in profound excitement, "is marriage! And I don't believe there's anyone in the way! I really don't!"

HE caught up his hat and carried it across the room to a closet. "Isn't life wonderful!" he said, swinging wide the closet door.

Then he saw the scarf.

There was only a little bit of it hanging down below the edge of a steamer rug with which the contents of one of the shelves had been covered, but like the dress Lucy had worn that day it was brown and orange.

Fearfully he stretched out his hand and removed the rug. Then he stood there for a long time staring at Lucy Devlin's clothes.

A shelf almost full of them that she had hidden while she kept him standing outside the door. Dresses and blouses and filmy underthings in neat piles.

In Jimmy's closet. Jimmy, whom she wasn't married to and wasn't going to marry.

He put back the scarf and spread the rug carefully over everything. A cold and mordant sickness griped his vitals.

Trial marriage was what he had heard clean sheets," she said; and found them that moment in the cupboard nearest at hand.

There was something she didn't want him to know. He made a tremendous effort to feel that it didn't make the least difference but he couldn't forget it.

He thought of it all the way to her rooming house—two blocks distant—and all the way back.

"I don't believe in love at first sight," he announced to Jimmy's room, "but I've got it. I've got it! The only cure for this, old Jimmy and his friends call it, sitting around the fire here, discussing subjects that were still pretty thoroughly undiscussed in Longfield.

He tried to lay aside a lifetime of instincts and inheritances and understand how it had come about. It must have been she who had suggested it, insisted, won Jimmy over. Jimmy would have stood out against it until somehow he was convinced that it would be better for her to try it than to give him up. Jimmy must have fallen headlong in love at last and somehow come to think that there was a chance that Lucy was right. And he'd have done his best to help her pull it off. And Lucy, Jonty thought, with a quite new pain at his heart would have pinned everything to the old divine illusion that love conquers everything. And poverty and Jimmy's ingrained belief that money didn't matter had done them in.

He sat for a long time while his mind ran on and on telling him that the only girl he'd ever loved loved Jimmy, and that Jimmy loved her, and they'd be married openly if only they had money enough.

"WELL," said Jimmy, "so you and Lucy went off together and made a day of it. What did you think of her?"

They were eating breakfast before the fire, the dogs lying at ease, each in his old accustomed place on the hearth rug. The four of them had come racketing in before Jonty was up.

"I liked her a lot," he said as simply as he could. "She seems awfully fond of you. Why—why don't you marry her, Jimmy?"

"I've thought of it a good many times. But it wouldn't do. It wouldn't do because—well, there are a lot of becauses."

"Is one of them—money?"

"Oh, yes, that's one of them, but—"

"I've got money," said Jonty and rose and walked to the window. He could feel Jimmy's eyes on the back of his head. It was like Jimmy to let him finish before commenting.

"I want to do something, Jim, and you mustn't block me," he said.

"What do you want to do?"

"I want to give you out and out a decent income so that you can marry Lucy Devlin this afternoon."

Jimmy went to his friend and put his arm about his shoulders. "You—you old son of a gun!" he said huskily. And then: "I don't love her, old man."

"You—don't—love—?" he began, when his voice was drowned in the thundering of the knocker. Instantly the dogs joined in.

When I'm announced like that," said Lucy, "I feel as if I were at least Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra and the East. Welcome home, Jimmy. How's the old bean?"

"The old bean's quite a peg better—good as new. Haven't had a headache now for four days." And Jimmy gave her a kiss, a perfunctory steak-and-potatoes kind of kiss.

"It's really you," she said to Jonty, "that I came to see. With all our chatter yesterday I didn't find out when you were going home. And so I came to say good-bye before I settled to work for the day."

"Why settle to work for the day?" said Jimmy; and for the first time in his life Jonty felt something rising up in him that didn't like Jimmy Darnley.

"For a reason," she said, "that's perfectly well known to you!"

"We don't agree on that point!" he said to Jonty. "And come to think of it, no more do you and I. You are both the children of Mammon. And therefore slaves. While I am ragged and free!"

"Yes, by heaven, you are!" Jonty thought, "but how can you boast of it? And what of her?"

"I got to replenish the larder," Jimmy said. "There'll be salt fish and bread for lunch, and you are both invited. Back in a minute."

"Silly old dear!" she said when he had gone. "He wants me to take life as lightly as he does, and he knows I can't!"

Jonty said something—he didn't know what. He was in love with her!

Raising his head he saw himself in a mirror—a white face all pain and interrogation. "What am I going to do?" it said, and he didn't know.

And then he was aware of his hand in the glass feeling vaguely over the table for a cigarette. Its white reflection sprang at him like a challenge. For an intense moment he saw his life gestured up into one white gesture of indecision.

He closed his hand firmly and thought: "It's going to grip something this time."

He walked over to Lucy.

"If anything ever breaks this up between you and Jimmy," he said, "I'm coming to you and ask you to marry me."

She flushed deeply.

"You found my clothes?"

"Yes; by accident."

Her face grew keen and tense. She searched his eyes. She took a long breath and said with slow bitterness:

"You're romantic. It's as obvious as your blue eyes. Romantic people do most of the harm of the world. I told you I wasn't married to Jimmy and wasn't going to be, and you felt sorry for me. You're asking me from pity. I like you; I like you as much as any man I ever met; but I wish you wouldn't. Do you really think a marriage begun like that could be a happy one?"

"No. Can't you see that I love you?"

"You've known me one day. It couldn't be love."

"Couldn't it? Do you think anything else on earth would make a man like me think that what—what you've done was all right?"

"Do you think it was all right?" she said unwaveringly.

"Yes, I do. I don't understand it, but well, you are the best I've ever come across, and you did it. Do you see?"

SHE looked at him for a long moment. "Yes," she said slowly. "I didn't do it, but I see. And I'm glad you don't understand. I couldn't have understood either. I wonder if I can make you understand something else. We live in such different worlds, you and I! Do you think you could understand that an able-bodied human being, a girl like me, could try and try and not be able to make enough to pay for food and shelter? Do you?"

"Yes!" he said. "Yes! Go on!"

"I was behind with my room rent in spite of everything I could do and my landlady gave me notice that unless I could pay up the first of the month I'd have to go. I didn't see how on earth I could get the money and I knew she'd attach my clothes if I didn't, and I had to have clothes. So I asked Jimmy if he'd mind my putting them in his closet there, and every day I brought over whatever I could crowd into my brief bag and—"

"G—g—good lord" said Jonty. "And Jimmy? You—you don't—?"

"Want to marry him? I'd as soon be tied to a locoed cow pony!"

Brick obeyed, not so assured as he looked. The hall seemed dusky. But a white-paneled door with "Office" on it was half open. Brick glanced inside and his mouth opened.

There was the man he sought, on his knees before a chair, as if praying. But his shoulders were shaking.

From above came a voice. "Is that you, Priscilla?"

"Oh," she said. "I thought it was Priscilla. Her mother's had a shock."

"I'll get her—Priscilla," said Brick.

"What's happened?"

"Your mother—isn't well. Don't look that way, Priscilla! It may not be bad."

But she was running toward her car. He caught her, put her in his own car.

"I'll drive you," he said.

Twenty miles an hour was the legal speed but he ignored it.

"I'll wait—across the street," said Brick when they arrived.

It was four o'clock. He was still there when the front door across the street opened a little after five. Brick's heart skipped a beat, then another. It wasn't Priscilla. It was her father. He came up to Brick's car and said:

"Come into my office."

Brick followed him. In the office Priscilla's father faced Brick.

"If you will have the agent who has been trying to buy that factory site for you draw up the papers I'll transfer it to you—at the assessed valuation."

Brick gaped for a second. Then: "But we're willing to pay—"

"I said the assessed valuation. I mean it—and not a penny more."

Brick's head reeled. It was incredible. "But how did you know I wanted it? I thought nobody in Lyemouth knew."

Priscilla's father ignored that. "Why did you come back to Lyemouth?"

Brick hesitated. Then: "I imagine you know the reason."

The older man neither affirmed nor denied that. "Plan to stay here—take a hand in running the town. I suppose?"

"I'd hoped to," admitted Brick.

John Trent was silent for a moment. Then: "I wish you luck," he said dryly. "I'll adjust the valuation on your cottage. That's all I wanted to say." He went on, however, "If you care to wait here, perhaps Priscilla will be down."

He departed, leaving Brick in a daze. What did it all mean? Then, in a rush, straight to his arms came Priscilla.

"Oh, Brick, I can hardly believe it!" she said. "They're going to Florida—Mother and Father—next week. It was only a tiny shock and the change is what she needs; she'll be all right for years if—"

"If your father will do his part?" hazarded Brick swiftly.

"He will," said Priscilla. "He's had an awful scare; he's ready to do anything."

And that, Brick realized was exactly what had happened. John Trent, driven to his knees, had made a covenant with Heaven. He had made definite promises. He would do this and that if Priscilla's mother were spared.

"He does really love her, always has loved her in his way, I think," Priscilla was saying. "Poor Father," she murmured. "He—he even told me you were here. I think he must have known—"

"What would happen?" suggested Brick. His arm drew her close. "I can assure you he did. Things like this," he whispered, as he kissed her eyes and nose. "And—like this," he added huskily, as his lips found hers.

"I—I hope you're right about this," said Priscilla.

"I know I'm right," Brick assured her. It was all clear to him now. "In fact, your father has not only handed me you but the town as well. So far as he's concerned, I can try my hand at running both of you."

"Well, you're going to have your hands full," prophesied Priscilla.

"I already have," he grinned.

And he was right—in every way.

Manila Seeks Origin of Strange Wood—Lighter Than Any Other

WOOD technologists and forest rangers in the Pacific Basin are intensely occupied in the search for the origin of a newly discovered wood, which has great commercial possibilities, says The New York Times. If it can be identified and cultivated, its uses will be revolutionary, since it is less than half the weight of balsa, the lightest known wood in commercial use.

Specimens have been found in the form of driftwood on the eastern coast of Luzon, and to these the natives have given the name "gumaan," meaning very light. Recently the Japanese Forestry Department sent a specimen to Luis J. Reyes, wood technologist of the Bureau of Forestry of the Philippines for identification, believing that the wood was indigenous to the Philippines. The Japanese wood has been discovered in one of the Japanese mandated territories in the Pacific. Similar driftwood has been found as far south as the Celebes group.

Search for Sources

FIELD men of the Bureau of Forestry have conducted an exhaustive search for possible growths in the Philippine hinterland, but have come to the conclusion that the wood is native to some other island or group of islands in the Pacific. Specific gravity tests show that the wood has ranges from 0.051 to 0.073, which means that its weight is only three to four and one-half pounds to the cubic foot. Balso, heretofore considered the lightest wood in existence, weighs about seven and one-half pounds.

Microscopic analysis shows that gumaan has an exceedingly thin cell wall, and is therefore highly porous. Nevertheless the cells are small and straight, so that the wood presents a solid appearance.

The commercial uses of this wood, if its origin is discovered and propagation is possible, should be remarkable. Balsa is now in wide use in the airplane industry for streamlines and pontoons, and is very valuable in the radio and refrigerator industries because of its sound-deadening properties. Gumaan possesses the same qualities to a far higher degree and will, therefore, be even more useful.

Rail Commission Head Is Great Scholar and Mathematician

THE choice of Mr. Justice Duff as chairman of the Royal Commission on the railway problem assured the public that they would get to the bottom of things before they tendered a report. Typical of the current estimate of him was the comment of a bystander at the opening session of the commission. Waving his hand at the cluster of railway experts, Canadian and international, the best brains on the transportation problem which the Government could call together, he said: "Before they get through, Mr. Justice Duff will know more about railways than any one of them."

He was first a mathematician. He taught geometry and algebra at Barrie Collegiate while earning money to go to Toronto University and study law. He has never completely forsaken his first intellectual passion. He is one of the tiny group of people who understand the Einstein theory.

Then he was a lawyer, and in the law he has been profoundly immersed ever since. He won his spurs as a member of the Alaska boundary arbitration. But his interests extended to other vast fields as well.

He is a fine classics scholar. He reads Greek and Latin authors with avidity. The tradition among his colleagues is that he "walks a portion," after the fashion of the cottar, every night before he retires. He has exchanged letters written in Greek with Lord Haldane and Augustine Birrell, so the story runs.

Military science and history intrigue him. Hon. Martin Burrell, discussing Wellington, was astounded at his acquaintance with the detail of the Peninsula campaigns. Mr. Duff could recite in intimate detail the manoeuvres of both sides almost ad infinitum.

The Brave Boer Boy

THE English general Seely has written a book, "Fear and Be Slain," in which occurs a story of a young Boer hero and a noble English officer. This is how The Children's Newspaper tells it:

During the Boer War young Captain Seely had news that a certain enemy commander was sleeping at a farm, and with a small patrol he hurried off to capture him. The Boer had slipped away just before they arrived, and this meant, not only that they had missed him, but that he knew of their coming. They would almost surely be ambushed and killed, or, in General Seely's own words, "worse still, captured," unless they could discover where the commando lay.

Patriotism and Devotion

THE only human being they could question was a Boer boy of twelve, who was left on the farm. He refused to answer them. Because the danger to his men was so great, Captain Seely was obliged to threaten him, although it went against the grain of a good Englishman. In war these things are done. The boy was told he would be shot if he still refused to speak; the soldiers were even told to bring their rifles to the ready.

"Then," says General Seely, writing all these years after, "I saw one of the most beautiful things that I have ever seen in my life. The boy was transfigured by patriotism and devotion. He lifted his head, looked me straight in the face, put his hands behind his back, and said in a loud, clear voice: "Ich sall ne sag."

He would not say. But no shot rang out. The English captain was smiling and shaking the boy's hand.

It was a bewildered boy who saw the British patrol ride away. Although they returned by another route they were attacked, as Captain Seely had foreseen. Luckily, help came in the nick of time, and the patrol got back to their own line with only a few casualties.

Roping a Wapiti

By A. D. KEAN

DURING November, 1898, where I lived in the Kootenay Valley of Southeastern British Columbia there came an extremely heavy snowfall. The storm had lasted nearly a week and was the means of driving a countless horde of wild game animals, wapiti, moose, black-tail (mule) and white-tail (Virginia) deer, together with mountain sheep and goats down out of the high ranges of the Rocky Mountains and on to the lower levels of the broad Kootenay River flats and meadows.

The deep snow made it very serious for our livestock, too, which at the time still ran loose in the foothills among the horses and cattle of our isolated neighbors.

We had ridden to the open range near the point where Bull River tumbles out of its high-walled mountain valley into the open reaches of the upper Kootenay, when we camped one night with a party of prospectors and ranchmen.

"You boys'll shore need snowshoes—an' bear-paws at that—if you expect to round up any horses or cattle in these piney hills," declared Tom Ray, recognized throughout that country as one of the greatest hunters and scouts the West had ever known. "But if you want some excitement, with that long, new, hair lassoo tied to your saddle-horn yonder, you'll git plenty chances, fer I-see'd the purtiest band of elk as ever come out of the hills not mor'n a mile or two from camp here jist this mornin'."

"I'd like to take on a job like that," I returned, highly pleased at old Tom's suggestion. "My brother and I are huntin' horses, but I've never roped an elk and I'd like to be able to say that I had done it."

"Hope old Tom's prediction comes true today," said my brother. (We were both just youngsters in our teens.) "What a grand lark it would be to lead a big bull elk back into camp. Wouldn't those old-timers be surprised!" And we laughed together at the thought.

Watching a Battle of Elks

WE crossed many game trails leading through the four-foot depth of snow, while visiting herds of horses known to be ranging in the locality. Having made the rounds and started toward camp early we picked up the deep-worn pathway of a small band of elk.

"Let's follow them," my brother suggested. "Maybe we won't have to go too far. Perhaps there is a 'yard' of them nearby; looks like the sort of place to find 'em in." So we set out more rapidly along the trail.

The snow was soft and feathery and the air quite still. Scarcely a sound betrayed our movements and the country we were walking over seemed devoid of life—it was so silent.

Not even a rabbit stirred. No whisky jacks or blue jays were about to waken the scattered thickets of low pines and firs with their incessant chatter. Only the soft crunch, crunch of our open-laced snowshoes could be heard at all, and they but faintly.

Suddenly we heard the click of horns, coming from over the brow of a ravine ahead.

Both of us knew the sound, for we had often heard the rattle of deer antlers when the animals met in combat. This time, however, the notes seemed louder and more prolonged.

"Must be a couple of young bulls in the bunch," advised my brother. "Gee! Let's watch 'im. Betcha they can put it all over a black-tail buck fight."

We crept cautiously to the brink of the little hollow, and sure enough, there were two fine young bull elks swaying and gouging at one another with their six-foot antlers.

Back and forth the animals lunged, sometimes remaining locked together for several moments. Then, freed once more, the pair would back a length or so, when at it again they'd go.

We discussed in whispers a plan of capturing one of the elk. "Wait till they quit fightin'," I ventured. "That'll leave one of them tired out maybe and we can rope him before he has time to get away. By putting two ropes on his horns—not too far down—we can likely guide him out near enough to camp to let the fellows see him. I don't fancy catching one of those critters in full strength. Looks dangerous enough to try the stunt on a weakened one, eh?"

"Sure," agreed my brother.

Shortly one of the elk gave up—turned away and refused to meet the other. At that we each gave a yell and swooped down on the nearest bull.

I threw first and caught a loop-hold well down over the heavy prongs of the animal's horns. My brother's rope whizzed through the air and also settled upon the frightened elk's wide antlers. Then began another kind of struggle.

Old-Timers Get a Surprise

WE handled the bull elk the same as if he was a wild horse, newly caught. First one of us would slack up on the rope while the other tried to scare the elk in the general direction of the old-timers' camp. The animal was not too rebellious and nearly always tried to get going in the way we headed him. Our ropes had powerful leverage, being placed more than two feet above the elk's head, and allowed us to guide him almost at will. Then, too, he was pretty tired after fighting and couldn't plunge more than thirty or forty feet through the fleecy snow without stopping. Only once or twice did the elk nearly get away from us, and that was when we came too near a well-worn trail where he could get good footing. It took us something like two hours to work our way within shouting distance of the camp.

"By all that's smoky!" exclaimed Tom Ray when he arrived at the clump of trees where the elk was treed. "You boys are the first two as ever I heard of ropin' a wapita an' leadin' him into camp a'foot. I've done it a'horseback myself, but I'm dashed if I'd try it like you fellers did," and the old guide went on to describe his amazement.

Of course we didn't tell him that the wapiti, as he called it, had been almost tired out with fighting. But we listened with deepening interest to the guide's recital of the wapiti's prowess and of its multitudinous numbers in the past.

"Wapiti is the Indian name for what we often call the elk," said the famous hunter. "The name, to the natives, means 'white bunch of hair.' Wapiti used to range from New York and Ontario all over the American continent to the Peace River north an' to the Guadaloupe in Central Mexico south," he said.

"I shot one once with horns sixty-five inches long and they had a spread of fifty-one and a half inches. There was sixteen prongs on each antler. When I first came West there was said to be mor'n ten million wapiti north of the Wichita River—where Kansas now is. But they've been almost exterminated by heedless hunters who killed the helpless creatures as much for their teeth as for other purposes. An' I hope you boys'll turn that young bull yo've caught loose again. We've lots of deer meat at camp. And this storm an' deep snow'll make it hard enough for the few small bands of his kind to Winter through," the old guide concluded.

Rest assured, we promptly did old Tom Ray's bidding—but had to cut our ropes from the wapiti's horns in order to set him free once more.

Today Dominion Government statistics inform us that some 30,000 wapiti find sanctuary in Western Canada. And who knows but the descendants of that very bull we caught and led to camp have helped to replenish the upland valleys of British Columbia or to supply the needs of one of our ever-popular Eastern zoos.

Soliloquies in Victoria's Suburbia

THE Tsaycum Indian Reserve lies a few miles farther north from the Pauquachin Camp on the Saanich Peninsula. Unlike all of the other Reserves, it has no gates. It sprawls along the highway for all the world to see, gaunt, shabby and wholly unlovely, but overlooking the broad, beautiful waters of Patricia Bay and the far splendor of mountains. A few shacks, cheek by jowl with some ancient lodges, litter-strewn lanes and front yards, comprise the village, and by no stretch of the kindliest imagination can one make anything more out of a first impression. It's very ugly.

The smallest of the Reserves, only a handful of people live in it. Perhaps half a dozen families, more or less related. The chief is Edward Jim. But what lifts Tsaycum to the realms of romance and invests it with a dignity of its own is the presence there of Old Katie, a more picturesque figure than any other on the Reserve with the exception of Chief David and Chief Jim, of the Pauquachins.

She is very ancient. All of the other members of the Reserve declare she is more than one hundred years of age, years older even than David La Tasse. She looks it. But then Indians are prone to exaggerate. She may not be much over ninety. Her youngest living son, however, is seventy-three, and we were naively told that she had two other sons, now dead, and much older than the present one, who had died of old age. So Katie must be very full of years. To add to her distinction she is the mother of the present chief.

We first saw her as we drove along to the north end of the village. She was out on the bank gathering sticks for her fire. Her back was to us. We glimpsed only a stooping figure in a dark striped skirt and a black shawl, bent almost double, laboriously picking up an armful of drift wood.

When we returned to call on Old Katie, an hour later, she was nowhere to be seen. So we went to the lodge where she makes her home.

"You will see something now that you've never seen before," said Nurse Hagan, with whom we were traveling, as she turned into the littered bit of greensward which is Katie's front garden.

The lodge is not large as lodges go, but a very big building for a dwelling, especially for the dwelling of a little old woman who lives there entirely by herself. It is perhaps thirty by forty feet, and the usual towering height, with a sort of cupola arrangement on top which is really a chimney—a roof raised slightly from the main roof and open all around to permit the passage of smoke, which was pouring through, when we saw it, in dense black billows, bespeaking a newly-lit fire within.

The door, as large as a barn door, was securely fastened, and a loud groaning and wailing which continued for some minutes, was all the reply we had to our knocking. But as we knew Katie must be far from the suffering her protestations would indicate, we continued rather peremptorily to demand admittance. She would not have answered even at that probably, if she had not recognized the nurse's voice, for she is a crochety, wilful and obstinate old person when she likes to be.

After a great deal of fumbling and more moaning and complaining, a bolt was slipped and a bar lifted, and then the sunless Winter light fell upon Old Katie as she opened to us.

Where Time Was Cruel

MANY, many years ago, when Victoria was still a small fort within its palisades and Saanich an unknown wilderness, Katie must have been an attractive young squaw. Her features are still good, and when she smiles, some vague little ghost of a long past beauty shows itself for a fleeting instant. But her face is dry and leathery, full of lines; her eyes are weak, her mouth sunken. Around her head, in Indian fashion, she wears a handkerchief. Her neck and arms and chest are so thin, the skin so loose upon them that it seemed almost sacrilege to look upon them. Time can be very cruel in its ravages. She hobbles along with the aid of a stick, and every step she took was punctuated with a groan.

But it's not so bad as it seems. Katie loves sympathy. Loves playing to the gallery. She limps about from house to house in North Saanich when she feels strong enough, and the sight of her pathetic figure and her pleading, old face would move the heart of a stoic. She gets shookum potlache.

We are grateful to Katie, as we were to Chief Jim of the Pauquachins, whom we had the luck to visit while he was in his lodge, for an unforgettable picture, a picture that was not so much suggestive of the past life of the Indians, though it was that, too, as it was of mystery and sorcery and all of the ancient rites which belonged to myth and legend. Katie's abode would make a splendid setting for the witches of "Macbeth."

The lodge was almost dark. It would have been quite dark if the fire had not been burning, a bright driftwood fire on the earth floor. No windows in the building except one at the end, which was completely covered with odd bits of tin, shingle and paper, as though it was intended to exclude every particle of daylight, or any chance for the peeping in of passers-by. But for all that, the atmosphere was not bad. The walls of these lodges are so lofty and the ventilation so good that there is a constant fresh current of the salty air from the sea, and the obedient smoke goes straight up and out of its ample hole in the roof.

The fire was built close beside Katie's bed, and the bed was another thing we didn't want to look at too close: It was so intimate. Katie pretty well lives in it, when she isn't out gathering wood for the fire. It is made up on part of the wide platform which runs all round the lodge, and besides the bed there are piled upon this broad shelf, black trunks, worn and weather-stained boxes, great dark bundles, odd bits of old lumber—everything grimy and sombre. Hundreds of dog salmon are strung on poles in the cavernous heighs to dry. Not a bright hue anywhere. All suggestive of age and decay and secrecy—old secrets that are very much better forgotten. The only cheery note in the lodge was the fire, which sparked and flamed and gave forth a ruddy, kindly glow, making a wonderful picture of that dark interior.

In this glow crouched Old Katie, close beside her bed, and the fire was gentle with her and invested her with a transient glory, so that she became the presiding genius of the mysterious gloom, and we shall always remember her, the rosy light on her face, for which the shadows made the vast background.

But she was like a child, really, a spoiled child, too, whimpering and scolding and not to be comforted. She had asked for a lamp as a Christmas present and it had not been forthcoming. A lamp would not be at all a safe thing for Katie to have in that firetrap of a place, and in her old, uncertain hands. But she had expected it. She was given candy and fruit and tobacco, and a new pipe, and finally a twenty-five cent piece. Not until she held the "two bits" between her old fingers did she cease from grumbling and break into smiles. We left her evidently much consoled, though not satisfied.

Government Is Good

NOW the Government is very good to the Indians: what they need, they get. They have all the healthy food they require, and nurse's and doctor's attention. But some of their wants are hard to gratify, and the question of a lamp for Katie was a puzzle. Finally it was decided to buy her a lantern, and when we drove down to the store at Sidney to leave other orders for the Reserves, we also procured a lantern for Katie, a nice, bright, new lantern, which was kindly filled for us, and we went the long way round home so that Katie's wish might be gratified that night. She should have a proper light to go to bed by.

But we were the ones to be disappointed this time. We expected to see Old Katie's face wreathed in smiles and hear chorties of gratitude. Not at all.

She took the lantern and carried it over by the fire, placing it on the platform. There was nowhere else for it, as the lodge doesn't boast a stick of furniture. Then she crouched beside it and looked very sad indeed.

"Now, what's the matter? Don't you like your nice, new lantern, Katie?" asked Nurse Hagan, kindly.

Midwinter Charms of Hawaii Are Unusual and Widely Varied

By C. STANDFORD-COST

MR. Ripley might well be paged, in fact he has been paged, and verified some of the unbelievable things said about that much-talked-of land, Hawaii! For the others, Hawaii herself offers facts and figures to support her statements.

Nowadays, for instance, when many in this part of the world are shivering beneath topcoats and furs, Hawaii announces open house for all newcomers to enjoy a swim in the waters of Waikiki Beach any evening, and promises faithfully that the water temperature will not be below 75 degrees! Feature swimming in such a sea at this time of year!

The Winter and Spring Months in Hawaii are perhaps the most vivid of the entire year. Sports abound—the above-mentioned swimming, aqua-planing, riding, hiking, golfing and fishing.

Weird Golf Course

SPEAKING of golf, some of the wierdest courses in the world are to be found in the Islands. There is a course where the player may watch the steaming pit of Kilauea Volcano between drives, and another where a freak wind across a mountain top will loft a mashie shot to carry three and four hundred yards, and another where the veriest dub may make a hole-in-one into a fire pit, and another—perhaps the most beautiful of all—where players follow the course of their balls along a palm-lined coral beach in sight of the topaz sea, the famous Royal Hawaiian Hotel's course at Waialae.

But all sportsmen do not like golf. Some prefer to follow in the tracks of Isaak Walton, and for those there are f-i-s-h! A two-hundred-pounder is a mere minnow compared with some that are caught in the waters off the various islands. It is asserted and proven by the catches of some of the Japanese commercial fishermen, that swordfish swim those waters that will tip the scares at more than 600 pounds!

Sports Are Not All

YET Hawaii is not all sports, the Islanders state. Let there be no misunderstanding on that point. Its greatest charm is the country itself, its inate beauty and peace and restfulness.

At night, when the moon tips over the rim on Diamond Head, the scent of flowers upon the air grows more heavy and fragrant, and the softer strains of Island music mingle with the whisper of the Trades in coco-fronds, and beach-boys' voices sing the ancient love songs of Old Hawaii. Then it is that Hawaii is at its best, and then it is that the fingers of the land entwine about the heartstrings of the stranger, so that no matter where he may roam in after years, the haunting strains of "Aloha Oe" will always bring a tightening of the breast and to his throat the catch of a threatened sob.

Richmond

THE picturesque old-world town of Richmond, which is situated on the bank of the River Thames, a few miles to the west of London, was a favorite residence of the British Sovereigns from the 13th to the 17th century.

The town was formerly known as Sheen, a name derived from "shene," the Anglo-Saxon word for "shining" and "beautiful." The first royal residence, an old manor house, in which Edward I received the Scottish Commissioners in 1305, was replaced by a fine palace erected by Edward III, who died there in 1377. Seventeen years later, Queen Anne, the wife of Richard II, passed away within its walls, and the grief of the king was so great that he ordered the building to be demolished, but it was re-erected by Henry V, after his return from the Battle of Agincourt, and at the same time he built a Carthusian convent in the adjacent deer park. The palace was destroyed by fire in 1498, and its magnificent successor was erected by Henry VII, who altered its name from Sheen to Richmond in memory of the historic castle in the North of England, from which he had derived his former title of Earl of Richmond.

When Cardinal Wolsey vacated his splendid mansion at Hampton Court and presented it to Henry VIII, the king gave him in exchange Richmond Palace, but in a few years the all-powerful prelate was robbed of all his property by his royal master and the Richmond gift reverted to the Crown. It was in Richmond Palace that Queen Elizabeth passed away in 1603, and a few months later it became the residence of Prince Henry, the eldest son of James I. After the execution of the ill-fated Charles I the Commonwealth Government destroyed a large portion of the palace, and presented its beautiful park to the citizens of London, who in turn presented it to Charles II at the Restoration of the Monarchy in 1660. The palace then became the residence of Queen Henrietta Maria, the widowed mother of the Merry Monarch, and in 1688 it was for a few months used as a nursery for James II's infant son, who in later years was known as the "Old Pretender." The last royal occupant of the palace was George II, when Prince of Wales, but he soon built a new home in the vicinity, known as White Lodge, and all that now remains of Richmond Palace is its red-brick gateway, on which appears a battered representation of the arms of Henry VIII.

IN Maid of Honor Row are the houses erected by George II for the numerous ladies in attendance on his wife, Queen Caroline; and White Lodge, which is still a royal residence, was the home of our present sovereigns during the period that they bore the titles of Duke and Duchess of York, and it was there that their eldest son, the present Prince of Wales, was born.

In the grounds of Pembroke Lodge, which was the residence of Lord John Russell, the great Victorian statesman, stands a small hill, upon which Henry VIII stood and watched for the appearance in the sky of a smoke-rocket fired from the Tower of London to announce that the execution of Anne Boleyn had been carried out.

The wonderful view from Richmond Hill has been described by many of our great writers, including James Thomson, the poet, in "The Seasons"; and Sir Walter Scott in "The Heart of Midlothian"; and in the latter work the scene of the meeting of Jeanie Deans and Queen Caroline is placed in the grounds of the royal residence at Richmond. In 1738 a small inn was built on the summit of the hill, and this subsequently grew into the famous "Star and Garter Hotel," which figures in Thackeray's "Vanity Fair" and many other novels. The hotel, which was a favorite resort of the social world for over a century, was demolished in 1915; and the site is now occupied by a home for soldiers and sailors permanently disabled in the Great War, the land being purchased and presented by the members of the British Auctioneers' Institute, and the home erected and equipped by the subscriptions of the women of England.

The ancient market town of Richmond in Yorkshire, from which Henry VII derived his early title of Earl of Richmond, was part of the great estate which he inherited from his father—Edmund Tudor. It was once the property of Edwin, the great Saxon earl, and was given, together with the title, by William the Conqueror to one of his knights, Alan Rufus, who erected the great castle, which still stands on the summit of a hill overlooking the town. Roping a Wapiti

By A. D. KEAN

DURING November, 1898, where I lived in the Kootenay Valley of Southeastern British Columbia there came an extremely heavy snowfall. The storm had lasted nearly a week and was the means of driving a countless horde of wild game animals, wapiti, moose, black-tail (mule) and white-tail (Virginia) deer, together with mountain sheep and goats down out of the high ranges of the Rocky Mountains and on to the lower levels of the broad Kootenay River flats and meadows.

The deep snow made it very serious for our livestock, too, which at the time still ran loose in the foothills among the horses and cattle of our isolated neighbors.

We had ridden to the open range near the point where Bull River tumbles out of its high-walled mountain valley into the open reaches of the upper Kootenay, when we camped one night with a party of prospectors and ranchmen.

"You boys'll shore need snowshoes—an' bear-paws at that—if you expect to round up any horses or cattle in these piney hills," declared Tom Ray, recognized throughout that country as one of the greatest hunters and scouts the West had ever known. "But if you want some excitement, with that long, new, hair lassoo tied to your saddle-horn yonder, you'll git plenty chances, fer I see'd the purtiest band of elk as ever come out of the hills not mor'n a mile or two from camp here jist this mornin'."

"I'd like to take on a job like that," I returned, highly pleased at old Tom's suggestion. "My brother and I are huntin' horses, but I've never roped an elk and I'd like to be able to say that I had done it."

"Hope old Tom's prediction comes true today," said my brother. (We were both just youngsters in our teens.) "What a grand lark it would be to lead a big bull elk back into camp. Wouldn't those old-timers be surprised!" And we laughed together at the thought.

Watching a Battle of Elks

WE crossed many game trails leading through the four-foot depth of snow, while visiting herds of horses known to be ranging in the locality. Having made the rounds and started toward camp early we picked up the deep-worn pathway of a small band of elk.

"Let's follow them," my brother suggested. "Maybe we won't have to go too far. Perhaps there is a 'yard' of them nearby; looks like the sort of place to find 'em in." So we set out more rapidly along the trail.

The snow was soft and feathery and the air quite still. Scarcely a sound betrayed our movements and the country we were walking over seemed devoid of life—it was so silent.

Not even a rabbit stirred. No whisky jacks or blue jays were about to waken the scattered thickets of low pines and firs with their incessant chatter. Only the soft crunch, crunch of our open-laced snowshoes could be heard at all, and they but faintly.

Suddenly we heard the click of horns, coming from over the brow of a ravine ahead.

Both of us knew the sound, for we had often heard the rattle of deer antlers when the animals met in combat. This time, however, the notes seemed louder and more prolonged.

"Must be a couple of young bulls in the bunch," advised my brother. "Gee! Let's watch 'im. Betcha they can put it all over a black-tail buck fight."

We crept cautiously to the brink of the little hollow, and sure enough, there were two fine young bull elks swaying and gouging at one another with their six-foot antlers.

Back and forth the animals lunged, some times remaining locked together for several moments. Then, freed once more, the pair would back a length or so, when at it again they'd go.

We discussed in whispers a plan of capturing one of the elk. "Wait till they quit fightin'," I ventured. "That'll leave one of them tired out maybe and we can rope him before he has time to get away. By putting two ropes on his horns—not too far down—we can likely guide him out near enough to camp to let the fellows see him. I don't fancy catching one of those critters in full strength. Looks dangerous enough to try the stunt on a weakened one, eh?"

"Sure," agreed my brother.

Shortly one of the elk gave up—turned away and refused to meet the other. At that we each gave a yell and swooped down on the nearest bull.

I threw first and caught a loop-hold well down over the heavy prongs of the animal's horns. My brother's rope whizzed through the air and also settled upon the frightened elk's wide antlers. Then began another kind of struggle.

Old-Timers Get a Surprise

WE handled the bull elk the same as if he was a wild horse, newly caught. First one of us would slack up on the rope while the other tried to scare the elk in the general direction of the old-timers' camp. The animal was not too rebellious and nearly always tried to get going in the way we headed him. Our ropes had powerful leverage, being placed more than two feet above the elk's head, and allowed us to guide him almost at will. Then, too, he was pretty tired after fighting and couldn't plunge more than thirty or forty feet through the fleecy snow without stopping. Only once or twice did the elk nearly get away from us, and that was when we came too near a well-worn trail where he could get good footing. It took us something like two hours to work our way within shouting distance of the camp.

"By all that's smoky!" exclaimed Tom Ray when he arrived at the clump of trees where the elk was treed. "You boys are the first two as ever I heard of ropin' a wapita an' leadin' him into camp a'foot. I've done it a'horseback myself, but I'm dashed if I'd try it like you fellers did," and the old guide went on to describe his amazement.

Of course we didn't tell him that the wapiti, as he called it, had been almost tired out with fighting. But we listened with deepening interest to the guide's recital of the wapiti's prowess and of its multitudinous numbers in the past.

"Wapiti is the Indian name for what we often call the elk," said the famous hunter. "The name, to the natives, means 'white bunch of hair.' Wapiti used to range from New York and Ontario all over the American continent to the Peace River north an' to the Guadaloupe in Central Mexico south," he said.

"I shot one once with horns sixty-five inches long and they had a spread of fifty-one and a half inches. There was sixteen prongs on each antler. When I first came West there was said to be mor'n ten million wapiti north of the Wichita River—where Kansas now is. But they've been almost exterminated by heedless hunters who killed the helpless creatures as much for their teeth as for other purposes. An' I hope you boys'll turn that young bull yo've caught loose again. We've lots of deer meat at camp. And this storm an' deep snow'll make it hard enough for the few small bands of his kind to Winter through," the old guide concluded.

Rest assured, we promptly did old Tom Ray's bidding—but had to cut our ropes from the wapiti's horns in order to set him free once more.

Today Dominion Government statistics inform us that some 30,000 wapiti find sanctuary in Western Canada. And who knows but the descendants of that very bull we caught and led to camp have helped to replenish the upland valleys of British Columbia or to supply the needs of one of our ever-popular Eastern zoos.

Soliloquies in Victoria's Suburbia

THE Tseycum Indian Reserve lies a few miles farther north from the Pauquachin Camp on the Saanich Peninsula. Unlike all of the other Reserves, it has no gates. It sprawls along the highway for all the world to see, gaunt, shabby and wholly unlovely, but overlooking the broad, beautiful waters of Patricia Bay and the far splendor of mountains. A few shacks, cheek by jowl with some ancient lodges, litter-strewn lanes and front yards, comprise the village, and by no stretch of the kindliest imagination can one make anything more out of a first impression. It's very ugly.

The smallest of the Reserves, only a handful of people live in it. Perhaps half a dozen families, more or less related. The chief is Edward Jim. But what lifts Tseycum to the realms of romance and invests it with a dignity of its own is the presence there of Old Katie, a more picturesque figure than any other on the Reserve with the exception of Chief David and Chief Jim, of the Pauquachins.

She is very ancient. All of the other members of the Reserve declare she is more than one hundred years of age, years older even than David La Tasse. She looks it. But then Indians are prone to exaggerate. She may not be much over ninety. Her youngest living son, however, is seventy-three, and we were naively told that she had two other sons, now dead, and much older than the present one, who had died of old age. So Katie must be very full of years. To add to her distinction she is the mother of the present chief.

We first saw her as we drove along to the north end of the village. She was out on the bank gathering sticks for her fire. Her back was to us. We glimpsed only a stooping figure in a dark striped skirt and a black shawl, bent almost double, laboriously picking up an armful of drift wood.

When we returned to call on Old Katie, an hour later, she was nowhere to be seen. So we went to the lodge where she makes her home.

"You will see something now that you've never seen before," said Nurse Hagan, with whom we were traveling, as she turned into the littered bit of greensward which is Katie's front garden.

The lodge is not large as lodges go, but a very big building for a dwelling, especially for the dwelling of a little old woman who lives there entirely by herself. It is perhaps thirty by forty feet, and the usual towering height, with a sort of cupola arrangement on top which is really a chimney—a roof raised slightly from the main roof and open all around to permit the passage of smoke, which was pouring through, when we saw it, in dense black billows, bespeaking a newly-lit fire within.

The door, as large as a barn door, was securely fastened, and a loud groaning and wailing which continued for some minutes, was all the reply we had to our knocking. But as we knew Katie must be far from the suffering her protestations would indicate, we continued rather peremptorily to demand admittance. She would not have answered even at that probably, if she had not recognized the nurse's voice, for she is a crochety, wilful and obstinate old person when she likes to be.

After a great deal of fumbling and more moaning and complaining, a bolt was slipped and a bar lifted, and then the sunless Winter light fell upon Old Katie as she opened to us.

Where Time Was Cruel

MANY, many years ago, when Victoria was still a small fort within its palisades and Saanich an unknown wilderness, Katie must have been an attractive young squaw. Her features are still good, and when she smiles, some vague little ghost of a long past beauty shows itself for a fleeting instant. But her face is dry and leathery, full of lines; her eyes are weak, her mouth sunken. Around her head, in Indian fashion, she wears a handkerchief. Her neck and arms and chest are so thin, the skin so loose upon them that it seemed almost sacrilege to look upon them. Time can be very cruel in its ravages. She hobbles along with the aid of a stick, and every step she took was punctuated with a groan.

But it's not so bad as it seems. Katie loves sympathy. Loves playing to the gallery. She limps about from house to house in North Saanich when she feels strong enough, and the sight of her pathetic figure and her pleading, old face would move the heart of a stoic. She gets shookum potlache.

We are grateful to Katie, as we were to Chief Jim of the Pauquachins, whom we had the luck to visit while he was in his lodge, for an unforgettable picture, a picture that was not so much suggestive of the past life of the Indians, though it was that, too, as it was of mystery and sorcery and all of the ancient rites which belonged to myth and legend. Katie's abode would make a splendid setting for the witches of "Macbeth."

The lodge was almost dark. It would have been quite dark if the fire had not been burning, a bright driftwood fire on the earth floor. No windows in the building except one at the end, which was completely covered with odd bits of tin, shingle and paper, as though it was intended to exclude every particle of daylight, or any chance for the peeping in of passers-by. But for all that, the atmosphere was not bad. The walls of these lodges are so lofty and the ventilation so good that there is a constant fresh current of the salty air from the sea, and the obedient smoke goes straight up and out of its ample hole in the roof.

The fire was built close beside Katie's bed, and the bed was another thing we didn't want to look at too close: it was so intimate. Katie pretty well lives in it, when she isn't out gathering wood for the fire. It is made up on part of the wide platform which runs all round the lodge, and besides the bed there are piled upon this broad shelf, black trunks, worn and weather-stained boxes, great dark bundles, odd bits of old lumber—everything grimy and sombre. Hundreds of dog salmon are strung on poles in the cavernous heighs to dry. Not a bright hue anywhere. All suggestive of age and decay and secrecy—old secrets that are very much better forgotten. The only cheery note in the lodge was the fire, which sparked and flamed and gave forth a ruddy, kindly glow, making a wonderful picture of that dark interior.

In this glow crouched Old Katie, close beside her bed, and the fire was gentle with her and invested her with a transient glory, so that she became the presiding genius of the mysterious gloom, and we shall always remember her, the rosy light on her face, for which the shadows made the vast background.

But she was like a child, really, a spoiled child, too, whimpering and scolding and not to be comforted. She had asked for a lamp as a Christmas present and it had not been forthcoming. A lamp would not be at all a safe thing for Katie to have in that firetrap of a place, and in her old, uncertain hands. But she had expected it. She was given candy and fruit and tobacco, and a new pipe, and finally a twenty-five cent piece. Not until she held the "two bits" between her old fingers did she cease from grumbling and break into smiles. We left her evidently much consoled, though not satisfied.

Government Is Good

NOW the Government is very good to the Indians: what they need, they get. They have all the healthy food they require, and nurse's and doctor's attention. But some of their wants are hard to gratify, and the question of a lamp for Katie was a puzzle. Finally it was decided to buy her a lantern, and when we drove down to the store at Sidney to leave other orders for the Reserves, we also procured a lantern for Katie, a nice, bright, new lantern, which was kindly filled for us, and we went the long way round home so that Katie's wish might be gratified that night. She should have a proper light to go to bed by.

But we were the ones to be disappointed this time. We expected to see Old Katie's face wreathed in smiles and hear chorties of gratitude. Not at all.

She took the lantern and carried it over by the fire, placing it on the platform. There was nowhere else for it, as the lodge doesn't boast a stick of furniture. Then she crouched beside it and looked very sad indeed.

"Now, what's the matter? Don't you like your nice, new lantern, Katie?" asked Nurse Hagan, kindly.

By C. STANDFORD-COST

MR. Ripley might well be paged, in fact he has been paged, and verified some of the unbelievable things said about that much-talked-of land, Hawaii! For the others, Hawaii herself offers facts and figures to support her statements.

Nowadays, for instance, when many in this part of the world are shivering beneath topcoats and furs, Hawaii announces open house for all newcomers to enjoy a swim in the waters of Waikiki Beach any evening, and promises faithfully that the water temperature will not be below 75 degrees! Feature swimming in such a sea at this time of year!

The Winter and Spring Months in Hawaii are perhaps the most vivid of the entire year. Sports abound—the above-mentioned swimming, aqua-planing, riding, hiking, golfing and fishing.

Suburb and Country

Some Recent Discoveries Concerning Plant Growth

PLANTS, like human beings, suffer from a variety of diseases; also, they require encouragement to enable them to produce various bloom and fruit, says Arthur Warner writing in The New York Times. At the Boyce Thompson Institute for Plant Research at Yonkers a group of scientists is at work on many tasks which are designed to aid the nurseryman to improve the quality of his stock, and to eliminate the scourges which Nature visits upon vegetation.

An example of what may be done to conserve plant life and to train it along new lines relates to the slow-growing holly tree. For a number of years the destruction of this lovely growth, which takes five to ten years to reach the berry-bearing stage, has become so great as practically to threaten its extinction, and at the Winter holiday season many nature-lovers are torn between the desire for holly and a reluctance to contribute to the slaughter of this not too abundant tree.

In this dilemma along comes Dr. P. W. Zimmerman of the institute and shows how we may have our cake and eat it too. He plants holly cuttings, which, after rooting, are placed in earthen pots and in ten months are gay with berries. It has to be done in the right way and Dr. Zimmerman still is working on some of the details, but the demonstration is ample already to show that a person who wants to take the trouble can raise his own holly inside of a year and that nurserymen can grow a yearly crop sufficient for holiday demands, avoiding the present destruction of the trees.

Germination of Seed

AMONG the notable findings of the institute are those in regard to germination of seeds. After they are harvested seeds require a period of after-ripening, or stratification, before they are ready to germinate. In some cases these may run into years because with changing temperatures seeds alternately are wakened and put to sleep again. This matter of after-ripening has been a puzzle and a difficulty among nurserymen.

Studies at the institute show that the time necessary for after-ripening can be determined definitely and greatly reduced if the seeds are kept at a uniform temperature, which for many has been found to be about forty-one degrees Fahrenheit. It used to be thought necessary to wait five to seven years after planting certain rose seeds in order to obtain complete germination, but it has been found that if they are kept at a constant temperature of forty-one degrees Fahrenheit they will germinate in 140 days.

The studies in seed germination have been carried on under the personal supervision of Dr. William Crocker, the director of the institute, but Dr. F. E. Denny has made important discoveries in a collateral line of research—speeding up the germination of buds by chemical treatment. After making tests with 224 chemicals, Dr. Denny found that potatoes treated with ethylene chlorhydrin vapors produced vines two feet high, bearing tubers, before growths from untreated stock appeared above ground. This discovery has an important commercial repercussion. It is now possible to take early potatoes from northern fields—where the hardiest tubers are grown—and by hurrying them through their period of dormancy plant them in the South for a second crop in the same season.

A Destructive Blight

ONE of the most puzzling and destructive blights with which we have had to contend in recent years is what is known as "the yellows," or Mosaic disease. It has attacked peach trees, tobacco, cane, cucumbers, potatoes and tomatoes, lettuce and spinach, corn, sugar beets, asters, dahlias and numerous other growths, yellowing and dwarfing the foliage and injuring the crop. It is much of a mystery so far. Scientists have not discovered whether it is caused by a parasite or a chemical agent. For the present they call the enemy simply a virus.

But Dr. L. O. Kunkel has at least got so far as to discover the carrier of the virus to asters and some 170 other species, including lettuce. Dr. Kunkel has not only identified the carrier as a small leaf-hopper but has found a means of heading the insect off. Dr. Kunkel noticed that the adult leafhopper did not fly more than two or three feet above the ground and could not pass through a wire screen having eighteen meshes to the inch. Why not fence the trouble maker out?

At the Boyce Thompson Institute Dr. Kunkel planted several beds of asters enclosed by wire-screen fences. Adjacent were other beds of asters without protection. The planting was done early in June before the leafhopper became numerous. One-third of the asters outside of the pale had yellowed by August 6. Inside the fences no yellowing appeared until August 14, when four plants were found to be affected. They were pulled up, as always should be done. By the middle of September eighty per cent of the unprotected asters were yellowed while only twenty per cent of those inside the fencing were affected.

Four-Foot Fence Effective

THE infection inside the fences was thought to be due to a few insects which had crawled up the screen, had been blown over by high wind, or had entered the gates when they were opened for purposes of cultivation. A four-foot fence was found to be as effective as higher ones, and the institute recommends the device in commercial cultivation pending a better means of fighting the virus or development of disease-resistant plants.

Among the most fascinating studies at the institute are those in regard to the effect of light on plants, under the direction of Dr. John M. Arthur. Among the appliances of the institute is a movable Gantry crane, equipped with forty-eight 1,000-watt electric bulbs. This crane can be moved over a greenhouse so as to flood it with powerful artificial light at night in succession to the rays of the sun by day. In addition there is a room in the basement of the institute constantly illuminated with twenty-five 1,500-watt lights.

It has been found that under continuous light some plants will work twenty-four hours a day, or the greater part of it. Others, like humans, retort with a strike when an effort is made to lengthen their working day. Barley, cabbage and clover grow cheerfully twenty-four hours a day when supplied continuously with light. Clover, under continuous light, has been made to blossom in thirty-five days as against several months usually required in the field. Tomato plants, on the other hand, demand some time for rest, and down tools when asked to work more than seventeen to nineteen hours a day.

Obviously artificial light would be too expensive a method of hurrying along a crop of barley, but Dr. Arthur's experiments, along with others at the United States Department of Agriculture, have a number of practical applications. Valuable flowers which need short days for their growth may be cultivated during long days by giving them the desirable amount of darkness, while flowers which need long days may be developed even in the short days of Winter by radiating them with electric light for a few hours each night.

Effect of Blue-Green Rays

DR. Arthur has experimented also with the growth of plants under light containing only part of the sun's rays. He uses a series of greenhouses, each shutting off a part of the spectrum. Ordinary window or greenhouse glass, as is well known, excludes most of the ultra-violet rays. Experiments indicate that growth is not affected by excluding ultra-violet rays, but when one shuts out also the blue-green rays the story is different.

Dr. Crocker is responsible for suggesting an improved method of detecting illuminating gas in a greenhouse. In cold weather especially, when the surface of the ground is frozen, gas escaping from a leak often travels considerable distances under ground, and when it enters a greenhouse, even in quantities undiscernible to the human nose, may do great damage. Sometimes canary birds are put in greenhouses as sentinels against gas, since they are affected more quickly than humans. But it has been found that the tomato plant has an even more sensitive nose for gas than the canary bird. Even one part of gas to 100,000 or 200,000 parts of atmosphere is enough to make the leaves of the tomato plant turn downward.

Plan to Improve Flock by Buying Males of High Quality

A FUNDAMENTAL principle of poultry breeding work which is winning wider recognition with each succeeding year is that the quality of the male bird is more important for success than any other single factor. It is largely through the male bird that the benefits of high powered blood lines developed through specialized breeding are passed along to the improvement of laying flocks. In breeding work the male bird is more than half the flock.

Under the Federal policy of record of performance for poultry two types of male birds are produced; these are the R.O.P. approved male, and the R.O.P. flock male. The R.O.P. approved male is the progeny of R.O.P. certified hens mated with specially selected male birds. Each chick is inspected for approval when six months old. Only worthy specimens of the breed, free from standard disqualifications, healthy, vigorous, and obviously desirable as to type are banded as approved cockerels.

Result of Careful Mating

THE R.O.P. flock males are the progeny of certified R.O.P. hens mated to cockerels of good type and breeding but not necessarily individually pedigreed, and not subject to departmental inspection on reaching maturity.

The value of the R.O.P. male arises out of the background of specialized breeding work as carried on under the Federal policy of performance for poultry. Under this policy the breeder trapnests pullet flocks on his home plant under the supervision and subject to the inspection of the Federal Department. For those birds which qualify by laying a prescribed minimum a certificate is issued. In each case the bird for which a certificate issues must show evident health and vigor and be free from the standard disqualifications for the breed, and the eggs laid must average not less than twenty-four ounces to the dozen.

Study Cost of Chicks

Value of eggs	$ 690.85
Electricity consumed (kilowatt hours)	432
Cost of electricity	$ 34.56
Oil consumed	gal. 60
Cost of oil	$ 21.00
Manual labor, 300 hours at 30 cents	90.00
Total cost	836.41
Cost per egg	cts. 6.1
Cost per live chick	cts. 9.9

As these figures are supplied on operating costs for the season of 1930 they are particularly interesting as indicating the present cost of producing a day-old chick.

Western Sire Wins in East

Lochinvar, the great Clydesdale stallion owned by J. E. Falconer, Govan, Saskatchewan, which has just completed a successful invasion of the major shows by winning the Grand Championship of his breed at Toronto, Chicago and the Ontario Provincial Winter Fair at Guelph. Lochinvar is six years old, and has won fifteen grand championships and one reserve grand championship. Experts at Chicago International Show declared him to be "without doubt, the best Clydesdale stallion seen there in twenty years."

The Garden Week by Week

By NORMAN W. F. RANT, F.R.H.S.

IN making a wild garden one has to try and visualize the plants as they will look later on, when they have attained a considerable growth. If this is not done, there will be considerable danger of overplanting. Further, one must try to see how the groupings will look from various points of view. Of course, one will want the plantings to look their best from those points of view most used, as, for instance, the windows of the house and the main walks of the garden. And again, one must try and associate plants which flower or produce colored foliage in the Fall and Winter with evergreens of different colored greens. And lastly, one must be sure to have a good background for the plants when they are in flower.

Primulas mixed, say Japonica, pulvurlenta, helodoxa, Florindae and Bulleyana, with Siberian Iris against a background of ferns and bamboo, and with, if possible, water in the foreground. This planting may be made effective either on a large or a small scale.

To Grow on Oaks

IF you want something to grow up an oak tree, try Polygonum Baldschuanicum. This plant in a few years will climb all over the branches of the oak, without doing the tree the least harm, and in its season, which is a very long one, will cover itself with its beautiful white flowers.

For Winter Effect

THERE is no better shrub or small tree suitable for town gardens than Cotoneaster Frigida. It seems to matter little how much smoke there is in the atmosphere, for this hardy shrub takes these matters as they come. It is an attractive plant at all times, whether in leaf, flower or fruit. It is, however, in the Fall and early Winter that it is at the height of its beauty, when its scarlet fruit is wreathing its branches in profusion. It is equally effective whether planted as a single specimen or in large or small groups. It is the most robust and perhaps the most striking of all the family of cotoneasters. It will grow in any soil except that which is waterlogged.

If it is allowed to grow according to its own sweet will, it forms a spreading bush of more or less rounded shape, consisting of a number of stems springing from the base. It grows fairly quickly and will, in time, attain a height of twenty or more feet.

By removing the lower branches in the young state it may be grown as a standard, and in this form makes a fine, round head. There is a specimen in Victoria Park, Bath, England, with a stem six feet high and a foot through.

It flowers in May and June, and forms its berries, which are rich red in color, in the Fall. These often hang on until February if the birds will leave them alone, but birds are very fond of them, and the result is that they disappear earlier in most gardens.

For Hedges

THIS cotoneaster is an excellent subject for hedges and has been so used in England. Unfortunately it is not yet plentiful enough in this country to be used for this purpose.

This cotoneaster was introduced as long ago as 1824 but, like a great many other early introductions, was not well known until much later by most gardeners. It is a native of the Himilayas.

There are a number of other tall-growing cotoneasters worthy of a place in any garden. Among them are Cotoneaster bacillaris, Buxifolia, Simonsii, multiflora and Franchetia.

Honey Containers Play Important Part in Selling the Crop

THE producer of any food commodity realizes that his success in the marketing of that commodity depends upon the willingness of the consuming public to purchase it, and in the face of keen marketing competition he also knows that in order to create and maintain such a willingness in the mind of the buyer, his commodity must not only be of high-class quality, but that it must also be packed in clean and attractive containers.

Until a commodity becomes well-known for its quality, the type of container in which it is packed plays a great part in the selling of the commodity, for it is quite possible that an inferior product packed in an attractive container may find a much readier market than a high-class product in less conspicuous packages.

Containers that are broken, dented, badly stained, etc., are usually passed by, irrespective of the quality of their contents. The producers of honey are now realizing the part containers play in the marketing of their product. A few years ago honey was packed in almost anything that would hold it, but today honey is being packed in fancy glass bottles and lithographed tin pails.

Success Gives Impetus

SOME producers and even some provinces have adopted special containers for their own exclusive use, and it was really the success of the few who first thought of improving the package by making it more attractive that led to the recent improvement along this particular line.

In so far as honey containers are concerned, however, it is an unfortunate fact that the names commonly used for certain sizes of them are misleading, in that the name suggests more honey in the package than it really contains; the net weight of contents, however, is stamped on every container, and it is this stamp that should guide the purchaser when buying honey rather than the name given the container. An effort, however, is being made to correct this condition, either by changing the size of such container or by using numbers instead of names.—C. B. Gooderham, Dominion Apiarist.

Ultra-Violet Rays Make Hens Lay More Eggs

ARTIFICIAL sunshine in the form of ultra-violet light from special electric lamps that emit these rays is pepping up the poultry business. According to data compiled by the General Electric Company, the ultra-violet light not only induces the hens to lay more eggs, but improves the quality as well. These rays provide for chickens an ample supply of vitamin D, which enables the system to assimilate minerals and builds up calcium and phosphorus.

Cod liver oil has been fed for years as a substitute for natural sunshine in Winter, and a few years ago experiments were started with carbon arcs and mercury arcs as a means of providing the needed ultra-violet radiation in Winter. Now lamps are being produced for this purpose that are as simple to operate as any electric light used for illuminating purposes, and, in fact, they also serve for illumination in the poultry house. These lights allow the necessary ultra-violet rays to pass through but stop those likely to be injurious to the eyes.

The lamps were found to increase the size and weight of eggs, increase their vitamin D content, decrease the breakage from thin shells, increase the number of eggs laid and the percentage of fertile eggs, eliminate loss of chicks from rickets, increase the rate of growth of small chicks, produce larger and stronger pullets, and eliminate the necessity and inconvenience of feeding cod liver oil.

During one month one flock of hens treated with ultra-violet light laid 2,150 eggs, while a second flock, of the same size but untreated with the light, laid 1,262 eggs. Deducting the cost of current used, this poultryman realized $8.62 more for the month from the first than from the second flock.

Preparing Hogs at Home For Cured Meat Supply

MORE farmers undoubtedly wish to butcher and cure their meat this year than when dollars were more plentiful and meat animals higher in price. Not only do these folks want a supply of meat to take care of the needs of the family for the year; they also want to take advantage of the opportunity that exists in many communities to sell home-cured meat. Hogs often may be sold in this way at a much higher price than is afforded on the public markets at present.

To cure enough meat to last through next Summer and Fall, it is essential that butchering be done as early as possible. The curing of meat, and particularly pork, must be done while temperatures are fairly low. When the temperature gets much above forty degrees F. failure is likely to be encountered.

Most farmers have a method of butchering and cutting up the carcass that is fairly satisfactory, but often there is the complaint that the farm-cured meat just isn't as "good as father or grandfather used to have." The fact is that curing meat is not a lost art. It is a science, but a simple one. It requires merely the ability to follow a few simple directions. If curing is done properly, there is no reason why meat cured on farms this Winter should not be just as delicious as any that father or grandfather ever cured.

The Best Hog to Use

IF one is going to the bottom of meat curing and the question of tender, delicious meat, then he must first prescribe what kind of hog be killed. Next he must be sure that the hog is killed properly (a hog that is stunned or shot and dies from this may not have bled properly and meat from a hog that doesn't bleed properly is much more likely to spoil—blood is a superior medium for the growth of bacteria) and he must be sure that the carcass is cut up in a fairly satisfactory way.

What kind of hog shall one select for butchering? Certainly not an old stag, nor a fat, flabby old sow. If you want good meat, select healthy shoats in medium flesh, weighing 225 or 250 pounds. To insure a good bleed it is best to stick them alive and allow them to bleed to death. This is most likely to insure a good bleed.

To stick a hog, turn it on its back and stand astride, one man pulling up on its front legs. Another man, who will do the sticking, faces the hob, holding the head down with one hand and inserting the knife with the other. The knife should be inserted a couple of inches in front of the breast bone, about parallel to the ground until the point touches the breast bone. Go under the bone about a quarter of an inch, then pull up on the knife handle so that the point of the blade goes toward the neck bone. Turn the hog loose and if the sticking has been properly done the hog will soon die.

Best Day for Butchering

A GOOD day for butchering is one when the thermometer stands somewhere about freezing. The water for scalding ought not be over 155 degrees and not below 145 degrees at the time of scalding. At this temperature it takes about one or two minutes to give a satisfactory scald.

Never let the hog lie against the bottom side of the barrel, but keep him moving. Scald the hind end first. After getting the carcass as clean as possible with scrapers, use a knife to shave off any remaining hairs. The hog is then wet with cold water and scraped upward with the back edges of the knives. It is surprising how much dirty water can be squeezed from the pores in this manner.

After the hog is scraped clean, remove the entrails and split the animal down the backbone. As soon as the carcass has cooled enough to cut up readily, remove the head at the first or Atlas joint. The ham is removed by cutting at right angles to the shank. In large hogs, cut the ham off near the aitch or pelvic bones; in small hogs the cut may be made one or two inches below this bone.

Cutting of Shoulders

THE next step is to cut off the shoulder across the third rib. Remove the neck bones and ribs. Now cut off the shoulder butt parallel to the top edge of the shoulder, beginning at the point where the neck bone came out. The shoulder butt must be taken off so that the shoulder can be given a mild and uniform cure.

The shoulder butt has a layer of fat on it called the clear plate. This should be removed and used for lard. The butt now makes a fine piece for roasting. The middle pieces between the ham and shoulders is cut from the base of the tenderloin straight toward the chine bone. The loin may be used for chops or roasts. Another possibility is to bone it and can it. The belly, with the spareribs removed and the edges trimmed up, makes excellent bacon if cured properly—it need not be just "side meat" so salty that it can hardly be eaten.

Insulation of Poultry Houses Will Prevent Production Losses

THOSE poultrymen who are not sold on the value of insulation can sell themselves very easily in midwinter by hanging one thermometer inside the laying house and another outside. Read the temperature inside and out, put them down in two columns, and then you can see how much the temperature inside fluctuates with changes in weather. If you're open-minded, the figures will convince you of the value of insulation.

The difference in favor of insulation may sometimes prevent a loss of Winter egg production which might equal in one season the entire cost of insulation.

In order to realize the purpose of insulation in poultry houses without artificial heat or mechanical ventilation, the houses must be arranged so as to be easily closed as tight as possible during severely cold weather, to keep inside temperature from going too low. When weather conditions change, the front ventilators or windows must be opened as required to prevent a sudden rise of temperature. This requires careful attention and good judgment, otherwise complications may result.

Prevent Sudden Changes

THE proper management of insulated poultry houses which are closed tight during severe weather conditions asks for disregard of the popular view relative to ventilation and dampness, since the ventilation is regulated entirely from the standpoint of maintaining a uniform temperature within the house without regard to ventilation or dampness. The idea is, ventilation is necessary only to keep the inside temperature from rising; and dampness, so far as the birds are concerned, appears comparatively harmless as compared to sudden changes of temperature.

If the night is cold the house is closed tight; and if the day following is cloudy and continues cold, especially if windy, the house is kept closed or mostly so if there is no rise of temperature inside. If the morning following is clear and calm then it will usually be necessary to open the front ventilators or windows or both to prevent a sudden rise of temperature within on account of the heat of the sun. This procedure often permits a liberal admission of direct sunlight which is beneficial and at the same time surplus moisture within to escape.

Avoid Cold Drafts

IN general the aim should be to keep the inside temperature between 40 and 60 degrees. When the outside temperature rises above 40 degrees the front of the house may be quite open both day and night, but usually considerably more open during the day owing to the heat from the sun even when cloudy. When the ventilators or windows are opened, care must be used to avoid too much exposure of the birds to a cold draft, especially when there is a cold or chilly wind outside.

Remember this: Comfortable poultry houses and Winter egg production are closely associated. No Winter eggs, or only a few, can be expected from pullets obliged to roost in a place which offers little protection. If pullets do come into laying in a poorly constructed, ill-arranged coop or poultry house which affords little protection from the weather, the laying will in all probability cease with the first bad spell of Winter weather.

New poultry houses are being lined or insulated inside and arranged so they can easily be shut tight when weather conditions warrant it. This is to provide the comfort necessary to avoid the uncertainties of Winter egg production due to changes in weather.

Says Night Blooming Plant in China Is Most Interesting

CAPTAIN Fred Burdett, an orchid hunter, says he has the most romantic job in the world. He has been hunting orchids for forty years and has had all sorts of queer adventures. "Here's a strange thing," he said. "The most interesting plant I have ever come across isn't an orchid at all. It is a flower that blossoms in the night; at midnight it is at the height of its glory—a wonderful bloom of golden yellow alternating with the most marvelous blue. I have watched it expand slowly until it was eight inches across—or twenty-four inches round. And that's not the only extraordinary thing about it. That flower is a sort of god to the Chinese. From miles away they will come to see it bloom. They believe it is the flower of good luck. They stand in a reverent circle, their hands folded in front of them, and worship it. Then they inhale its scent. They are sure that anyone who breathes its fragrance will prosper in anything he does all through the year."

Too Much Grain Fattens

THOSE poultrymen who have the American class or the English class of chickens, namely, the Rocks, Wyandottes, Reds, Orpingtons, etc., must remember that these breeds have a tendency to put on fat at the expense of egg laying. If they are fed too heavily on grain, they will leave the mash alone and while under those conditions they will make excellent market birds, they will not fill the egg baskets.

With this in mind, it is well to watch the condition of the layers and cut down on the amount of scratch grain fed if they seem to get too fat.

Wilting in Storage

IF your apples and root vegetables are wilting in storage, sprinkle some water on the floor occasionally or hang a burlap bag so that part of it is immersed in a pail of water. The water will rise in the burlap by capillarity and evaporate into the air more quickly by this method. The moist air will retard evaporation from the stored products and will often gradually restore them to a good condition.

Sea's Greatest Graveyard Gives Up Its Last Ship

Salvage Work in Scapa Flow Has Been Stopped After Seven Years—Thirty-Two Vessels of the Former German Navy Scuttled by Their Crews Have Been Raised

LONDON (SNS).—The greatest maritime graveyard of the war has just given up the last skeleton which its dark, mysterious depths have held since a week before peace was signed at Versailles in June, twelve years ago. On that date the German crews in Scapa Flow scuttled the pride of what once was Imperial Germany.

Ten battleships, five battle cruisers, five cruisers and thirty-one destroyers settled slowly in the water and sank. The German navy was gone. Then a salvage firm undertook to raise these buried monsters and within the last seven years thirty-two of these crafts have been brought to light again only to reach another graveyard under the hammers and torches of breaking crews.

The work was done under the direction of E. F. Cox, managing director of Cox & Danks, British salvaging firm. They have now decided to close down operations, since the cost of scrap iron is so low that the work does not show profit.

FIRST RAISED IN 1924

Salvage experts at first declared that the German fleet must be left at the bottom of the sea, to be broken up by movements of the tide and eaten away by rust. But Mr. Cox believed these ships could be brought to the surface and based his belief ironically on the efficiency of a German war contrivance. He bought from the British Admiralty a hugh German floating dock, which was taken over after the war, for £200,000.

Some of the ships which have been immersed for five years and more were found in surprisingly good condition when they were brought up. The first of these was the V-70, which proved sufficiently seaworthy to be used for storage and a salvage ship. This was raised in August, 1924. After that the work went on steadily and all kinds of problems in maritime engineering have been met while the thirty-two vessels, six of these having more than 20,000 tons displacement were rescued and towed away.

Several destroyers were lifted to the surface before the cost of the dock was met. Some of them presented unique difficulties for what undoubtedly is one of the biggest salvage operations at sea ever undertaken.

When divers went to work on the destroyer S-136 they found the vessel lying on its side. It was the dock and the ingenious use made of it that was mainly responsible for the raising of that boat. Sections of the dock were placed on each side of the wreck, lying unseen below. Hawsers were hauled under the hulls by divers and then reeled in. First the rising tide lifted the sunken war craft from the ocean bed as sections of the dock with hawsers taut rose with the water. The lines were reeled in with winches as the tide fell.

After the destroyers were brought up, Mr. Cox decided to attack the heavier vessels. Some of these were lying on their sides or bottoms up.

Those which lay bottom side up were raised by making the hulls air-tight and pumping air into them. This meant months of work by divers in a forest of seaweed, and afterwards, when the air locks were constructed in the wrecked vessels, there was a constant danger of explosion. But it was in this way that the Moltke, 23,000-ton battle cruiser, was floated and later towed 200 miles to Rosyth.

MET DIFFICULT PROBLEMS

The same methods were used to bring the Seydlitz, Kaiser and the Bremse to the surface. In each case these wrecks had hundreds of holes in their hulls. Divers covered these with cement. But the intricacies of battleship construction made outside holes a relatively easy problem. For these crafts are full of pipes and often an undiscovered pipe carried air into a compartment where it was unwanted and of no use.

Work meeting such problems often went on for days, or even months, and then sometimes met disappointment. The problem of balancing the lifting power of compressed air in the various compartment was delicate and all work was useless unless it was solved. The Seydlitz was almost brought to light after three months of work, but miscalculations made it necessary to let her down again and start all over.

Longest Tow of Dock Completed Five Weeks Ahead

THE Jubilee Dock, the floating dock so named in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Wellington Harbor Board, arrived at Wellington, New Zealand, recently, thus completing the world's longest dock tow of 13,500 miles. The tow began on July 15 from the Tyne. The Jubilee Dock was built for the Wellington Harbor Board by Swan, Hunter and Wigham Richardson. It has a lifting capacity of 17,000 tons, and is 584 feet long. The route taken on the tow was by Gibraltar, the Suez Canal, Malacca Strait, and Torres Strait. The tow has been completed five weeks before the estimated time.

Grand Jury Appeals That Never Again Shall It Be Summoned

LONDON (CP).—Once more the appeal is heard from a grand jury that it should never again be summoned. At odd times over the last fifty years grand jurors in all parts of the country have made the plea for their extinction. A grand jury consists of "better-class men of the country," who are summoned to Quarter Sessions and Assizes to examine the bills of indictment against every prisoner before the prisoner is actually put on trial before a petty jury.

ONLY ONE REJECTED

The late Recorder of Manchester, A. J. Ashton, K.C., found that in eight years during which a thousand cases came to his court of Quarter Sessions there was only one in which the Grand Jury rejected the bill of indictment. In London no fewer than 700 grand jurors have been summoned in the course of the year to conduct this formality of examining indictments.

The grand jury system is a relic of the days when administration of justice was more loosely organized than it is now. Magistrates in obscure parts of the country no doubt did at one time commit persons to take their trial when there was really no case for a prisoner to answer. The grand jury in those days was a protection in saving an innocent person from the indignity and expense of standing his trial. Nowadays, though, magistrates act under the advice of a learned and experienced clerk, while the defendant himself in most instances has the benefit of legal assistance. Within the last generation, too, another safeguard against wrongful conviction has been provided through the Court of Criminal Appeal.

HAWKERS' APPEAL WELL MAINTAINED

Novelty in Mechanical Movement Interests Many Young and Old on London Streets

LONDON—Wherever the street toy hawker was to be found last Christmas his trade appeared to be as good as ever. In High Holborn, on both sides of the road where it is widest, they lined the edge of the pavement and displayed their cheap and often ingeniously made goods.

The street hawker's appeal is not to children only. There was the small metal cylinder which at a touch was transformed into something that suddenly came to life and writhed like a tiny snake A few yards away a hawker had a brisk sale of little metal cases which moved incessantly, as if stirred within by occult agency. No doubt many of the specimens of these and other mechanical toys which adults bought were meant for children, but their elders were certainly intent in the first place upon probing the secret of the mechanism. Models of such cinema favorites as Micky the Mouse; miniature elephants moving with a lumbering tread like their enormous prototypes; mice which bore too close resemblance to the animal—these and many others were to be seen. But there was a ready sale also for the dolls, balls, balloons, and all the others which have brought happiness to generations of children.

LONDONERS SEE CANADIAN STAR

Miss Pauline Garon Repeating Her Hollywood Success in Europe

The latest cinema star to arrive in London is Miss Pauline Garon, one of the brilliant company of Canadians who have distinguished themselves in Hollywood.

Canadian by birth, Miss Garon is Irish and French by descent, which explains why she played with great success in "The Green Ghost," the first talking picture to be made in French by Metro-Goldwin-Mayer. Her knowledge of the two languages makes her very useful for pictures which are destined for both the English and French speaking countries.

She is a pretty blond with hazel eyes. Before going into motion pictures she was on the American stage, where she achieved considerable success.

PRINCE AGAIN URGES VALUE OF PUBLICITY

TELLS THE WORLD COUNTRY IS ALIVE

LONDON.—The Prince of Wales attended and spoke at the annual general meeting of the Travel Association of Great Britain and Ireland at Caxton Hall, Westminster, recently.

The Prince of Wales said: I feel that I am entitled to come to a meeting of this association because I have traveled fairly extensively in the last ten or twelve years.

TRAVELED EXTENSIVELY

I have not only traveled to and visited all the Dominions and Colonies and many countries throughout the world, but I have also traveled extensively in Great Britain, so that I can see, so to speak, the two sides of the question. I know what Great Britain has to offer to those who visit us. I also know the attitude of and the way we are looked at by foreign countries. This is the moment when we want to try to impress on the world that our country is still alive; that it means to go forward again, and I would like to pay a tribute to the way that the association has tried to do this.

Now, I think we would like to acknowledge the help that the overseas press and newspapers have accorded to the Travel Association. We have been helped not only by overseas and foreign correspondents resident in London, but also by the editors of many newspapers in their own countries. There is one point to which I attach great importance. I have seen what other nations are doing in the way of organized publicity for their commeree and industry as well as for their attractions.

Everybody in every country is so intensely interested in the doings of his neighbors and in the doings of his foreign friends that we do not travel, even when we can, entirely for pleasure.

THE INDUSTRIAL SIDE

Since the war, and particularly in the very critical times through which we are going, we are intensely interested in and anxious to see the industrial side as well as the pleasure side of travel. It is important, as well as offering and showing what this country has in the way of trips and places to spend a holiday, to show that we have some great industries.

Seventy years ago Delane, the great editor of The Times, said: "My business is publicity." Let us remember that phrase. It recalls to my mind another, a somewhat lighter, quotation I once heard adapted from an old rhyme: "Early to bed and early to rise, but you'll soon be bust if you don't advertise." (Laughter.) These words I feel are very true at this moment.

NEED FOR MORE

There is undoubtedly—and I have said it before—a great deal more that we in this country could do in the way of advertising; but our publicity at the same time must be rationalized, as they say in industry. It must be organized on broad, cooperative and economical lines, as the Travel Association is doing.

BUBBLE AND SQUEAK GO OUT FOR A JAUNT

"Bubble" and "Squeak," the two penguins which escaped from the Zoological Gardens at Chessington, Surrey, last week, were discovered two days later at Hook, near Surbiton. Mr. Patrick Welsh, of Meadow Walk, Ewell, was cycling along Elm Road, Hook, when he saw two penguins waddling towards him. They stopped when they saw him, and he dismounted and "shooed" them into a neighboring garden. The Chessington Zoo authorities were notified and soon arrived to retrieve their possessions.

Three in the Limelight

MAHATMA GANDHI, it will be remembered, brought his own goat to England. Knowing then a thing or two about nannies, he is seen here with Miss Slade, English admiral's daughter and one of his followers, inspecting a prize goat at a London dairy show, recently.

Air Force Prepares for Cruise of 9,000 Miles

LONDON (CP).—Airplanes of the Royal Air Force, flying thousands of miles in formation as part of the annual training programme have blazed the air trail over most of the African continent, and have provided much of the knowledge of ground and weather conditions governing the operation of the commercial airway over the Cairo-Capetown route. They have also charted a route to the extreme west of Africa. Now the scheme of service cruises to British territory in the great continent is completed in the announcement of an imminent formation flight of four day-bombers from Egypt to Uganda, Kenya and Tanganyika. The coming flight will be the first of its kind detailed to explore thoroughly the possibilities of the intensive service flying in the region, and the personnel will spend much time in co-operation exercises with ground troups at various important points.

ELEVEN WEEKS' CRUISE

The cruise, approximately 9,000 miles from start to finish, will be begun from Heliopolis aerodrome, near Cairo, and end there eleven weeks later. South of Egypt and the Sudan the more important towns on the route are Entebbe, in Uganda, Kisumu, Nairobi, Mombasa, Dar-es-Salaam (the most southerly points of the cruise) and Zanzibar. At Entebbe the flight will remain for several days to practice supply-dropping, picking up of messages and other evolutions planned to assist smooth inter-working of land and air forces on active service.

Detailed to lead the cruise is Wing Commander A. T. Harris. His flight commander is Flight Lieutenant R. L. R. Atcherley, famous for his part in high speed flying.

TO TRAIN BOYS FOR SEA WORK

Representations Being Made to New Zealand Government on the Matter

AUCKLAND, N.Z. (CP).—That more provisions should be made for New Zealand youths who are willing to adopt the sea as a career is the opinion of a number of representatives of commercial, educational and social organizations who have been making representations to the New Zealand Government.

Prominent Auckland citizens are interested in the movement, which has as its aim the training of boys and the provision of greater opportunities for youths who wish to go to sea, not as ordinary seamen, but with the idea of ultimately rising to positions of command.

One of the conditions which operates against the training of boys at present is the restriction on the crews which can be carried on a ship sailing under New Zealand articles. While there is provision for ships to carry boys, in practice it is found that after one or two voyages boys try to ship as ordinary seamen. When boys are employed on ships their duties consist of cleaning brass, scrubbing and other odd jobs, and they gain no knowledge of handling a ship or cargo.

MANY FOREIGNERS

Ninety per cent of the men manning ships of New Zealand register are said to be from outside countries, and this applies to seamen, deck officers and to a smaller extent to engineers.

Shipping men see small prospect of changing this condition as long as the present depression continues, as there is a large surplus of able seamen and experienced ships' officers in New Zealand ports at the present time.

BEAUTY SPOT IN WALES PRESERVED

Private Generosity Enables National Trust to Take Custody of Area Near Harlech

Those who are well acquainted with the coast roads of North Wales will remember the stretch of road between Harlech and Llanbedr and Barmouth, which commands one of the most extensive and beautiful views in the country.

A short time ago it came to the knowledge of the National Trust that a portion of the land adjoining the road was offered for sale as an "eligible building site." There was no doubt about the reality of the danger of development for one plot was sold and a bungalow has been erected. There was imminent risk of a row of small houses being erected alongside the road, with a result that the view would inevitably have been interfered with.

Happily the Trust was able to interest one of its most generous supporters and was empowered to enter into negotiations which resulted in the transfer of the land in danger to the safe custody of the National Trust.

The area in question lies immediately to the south of Harlech Castle, and commands a truly magnificent view across Tremadoc Bay towards Criccieth and Pwllheli with a panorama of the Snowdon range beyond. This view will be for ever secured to the public by this timely purchase, and the council of the Trust feels that the thanks, not only of its members, but of the public at large are due to the generous action of the donor who enabled the purchase to be made.

For the first time in the industry's history British iron and steel imports exceed exports.

King's Grandson Hunting

ECONOMY IS SCHOOL NEED

Headmasters Agree on Need for Revision of Education Methods

At the annual meeting of the headmasters' conference under the presidency of Frank Fletcher, headmaster of Charterhouse, Rev. Dr. C. A. Alington, of Eton, moved that there is need for drastic revision on the education of the average boy.

He said of course as headmasters they knew that the average boy did not exist, and there was no accusation which was more hotly resented than that a parent had given birth to an average boy. (Laughter.)

LAMENTABLY NARROW

The English education of a century ago was lamentably narrow but it was, at any rate, based on a principle in which its professors heartily believed. "What do we hope for in the education of the average boy?" Dr. Alington added, "Or, as some would put it, what ought he to know?" He would like to express his conviction that they put an entirely exaggerated value on knowledge, as such. There were very few things indeed which they could say with certainty that every one ought to know.

When they had said that he must know arithmetic in the sense of being able to add, divide and subtract with reasonable accuracy, and that he must know enough of his own language to understand it when used by others, and to employ it himself, he verily believed that they had exhausted the demands that they had a right to make.

"The truth is," Dr. Alington said, "that we have before our eyes an imaginary picture of the men who is a good classical scholar, a competent chemist, with an adequate knowledge of physics and mathematics. We know no such person." A boy must be taught accuracy, either by mathematics or Latin prose, but not necessarily by both. The great object of education was to train powers of curiosity and observation.

Dr. Cyril Norwood (Harrow), in supporting the motion, said that secondary education covered the whole of the years from 10 to 18, and only over the latter half of that did public schools as such exercise direct control, although in the common entrance examination they exercised indirect control over the earlier part.

NEED OF REVISION

He was prepared to argue that the curriculum stood in need of drastic revision, as it concerned the earlier part through manifest defects presented by boys when they entered public schools at 13½ to 14 years of age. In the first place they were physically inferior to the product of the elementary state-aided system of education, because they were frequently unable to stand up or stand still or exercise physical control, and they presented many slight physical defects which might easily be remedied, and which would have been remedied if 100 marks for physical development had been awarded in the common entrance examination.

POSSIBILITIES OF ECONOMY

"The possibilities and limits of economies in our schools" formed a subject of discussion at a private sitting, at the close of which the following statement was given for publication:

"The financial position and responsibilities of individual schools differ so greatly that the conference feels unable to make any general suggestion as to economies which would be universally applicable. While recognizing with regret that the cost of education cannot be drastically reduced without grave loss of efficiency, it is of opinion that economies can and should be made by a saving in administrative expenses, a postponement, where practicable, of structural improvements and a withdrawal of all demands for expenditure on purposes which are not of essential value to the efficiency of the school.

"The conference wishes to draw attention to the fact that the expectations of the parents of boys in boarding schools have greatly increased in recent years, and suggests that every effort should be made to secure their co-operation."

CHESS PLAYER TOTALLY BLIND

The twelfth annual chess congress, which has begun at Hastings, is the most important of its kind ever held in England, and as the congress goes on yearly to greater triumphs, probably before long it will be the determining chess tournament of the world.

There are champions of their countries from Sweden, Czechoslovakia and India, many players from Germany, and some from Russia. Pitted against them, the most interesting entry to the experts, is Mr. I. Kashadan, the United States champion, who is paying his first visit to England.

Among the English players, Mr. Rupert Cross attracts particular attention. He is blind and a very heartening example of what a man may achieve in spite of adversity. He fingers an auxiliary board, the white pieces having spikes and the black pieces round tops, and from the feel of them he judges his game and dictates his moves.

He is among the best players in England, is at Oxford University and will soon qualify as a solicitor.

Britain's Improved Naval Air Service Is Most Formidable

Obsolete Craft in Fleet Air Arm Replaced With World's Swiftest and Most Efficient Fighting Planes With Elaborate Equipment

LONDON (CP).—The swiftest and most formidable naval fighting aeroplanes yet adopted for service with any of the world's great sea fleets have lately replaced obsolete craft in the equipment of the Fleet Air Arm. As part of the flying complement of the aircraft carriers Furious and Courageous, the new planes are likely to go to sea shortly for intensive practice, under service conditions, of reconnaissance, patrol, offensive action against hostile aircraft and artillery control that make up the greater portion of the duties of aeroplanes operating with a modern fleet.

ROCKET-LIKE CLIMBERS

Capable of speeds in excess of 200 miles an hour and of rocket-like climb to great heights, the new sea fighter, which is styled the Hawker "Nimrod," is a close cousin of the "Fury" single-seater biplane recently supplied to certain "interception" squadrons of the London defence system.

The "Nimrod," however, has certain components strengthened up to withstand the shocks imposed by the catapult, which can accelerate an aeroplane from rest to sixty miles an hour in three seconds. It is a landplane, with wheels and no seaplane floats, and must be protected against the results of an emergency alighting in the water; flotation bags fill the after portion of the fuselage, and flotation boxes are placed between the ribs and spars inside the wings.

ELABORATE EQUIPMENT

Finding the parent carrier after a flight may not be easy, especially if haze or cloud obscure the pilot's vision, and the "Nimrod" carries, therefore, more elaborate navigational equipment than the "Fury," as well as wireless and additional lighting.

PAY HONOR TO CHEESE FLEET

First of New Zealand Ships to Arrive Given Wonderful Welcome

LONDON.—Never has cheese arrived in England in such a state as when the Lord Mayor of London, Sir Maurice Jenks, city sheriffs, trumpeters of the Royal Horse Guards and boys of the training ship Arethusa gathered on Hays Wharf, London Bridge, to welcome the steamer Somerset, the first of the New Zealand cheese fleet to reach this country this season.

The Lord Mayor, who was accompanied by the mace and sword bearers and dressed in his full robes, stepped onto the wharf as a decorated tug drawing the first bargeload of cheese from the Somerset steamed to the head of the old tea dock in the Pool of London. On board was the High Commissioner for New Zealand (Sir Thomas Wilford) and New Zealand dairymaids. The Lord Mayor was piped on board by the boatswain, after which the party disembarked and mounted a scarlet dais.

English dairymaids, in print dresses and caps and wearing sashes denoting various English cheeses, curtsied before the Lord Mayor as the toastmaster recited a poem of welcome to the New Zealand cheese:

All hail, ye brethern of the curd,
Ye famous cheeses, hear my word
Of greeting from the Fatherland
Full of the vitamins they come
To fight the fight as you yourselves
Of British cheese for British sheives,
And make it every day much harder

With a fanfare of trumpets, the procession moved on to partake of an "economy luncheon," where dairymaids from various cheese-producing counties served specimens of their native produce.

CONVICTS GIVE VARIETY TURNS

Sentiment and Comedy Mingle in Two-Hour Concert at Lewes

Convicts in evening dress, singing sentimental songs, and others in uproarious comedy acts, entertained their fellow prisoners and prominent townspeople to a two-hours' variety concert in Lewes Gaol.

There were twenty-four items in the programme, including band selections, comedy monologues and community singing. The acts were presented on a specially prepared stage by preventive detention men recently transferred to Lewes after serving long sentences at Camp Hill Prison, Isle of Wight.

ROUNDS OF APPLAUSE

One convict—an attractive tenor—sang "You Are My Heart's Delight." Another was a Lancashire comedian. Two others gave a comedy duologue entitled "A Hole in the Road," a skit on road mending.

The proceeds of the concert will go to the fund for the renovation of the prison chapel and to the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society.

Book Selling Quite Brisk In England

LONDON (CP).—It seems curious at first sight that while fewer books were published in 1931 than the previous year, business in the actual selling of books has been recently quite brisk. More books have been sold, although the booksellers instituted no special selling campaign. Probably this result is due to more people taking pleasure in reading at home rather than in incurring the expense of recreation outside the house.

EXHIBIT BEAUTY IN 700 FROCKS

Twenty of England's Fairest Will Be Show-Girls of Industry

Twenty of the country's most beautiful mannequins have been chosen to wear 700 frocks in the British Textiles Exhibition, the new combined textiles section of the British Industries Fair at the White City, London, in February. Fashion parades will be held three times daily during the fair and will include everything in a woman's wardrobe—from evening gowns and dainty lingerie to sports wear and bathing costumes—all in suitable materials of British manufacture.

ALLURING AVENUE

Seven halls at the White City will be transformed into an alluring avenue of color in which will be seen the finest fabrics woven on British looms, clothing of all kinds from delicate silk dresses to factory overalls, all the accessories of dress, household linen, furnishing fabrics and cloth for industrial purposes.

The best-dressed man in the world is still the Englishman and all that the Englishman wears will be seen at the White City as proof that this country is unchallenged still in clothing men. In women's clothes there is a growing preference for English design, cloth and cut.

There is to be a club for overseas buyers at the White City—as well as at Olympia where the other lighter industries exhibit—and it is stated that extra interpreters may be required for languages which will range from Dutch and Spanish to Arabic and Chinese.

LAST LINK WITH SULLIVAN GONE

Miss Jane Sullivan Dies in Chelsea —Was Known to All Famous Savoyards

The last direct link with Sir Arthur Sullivan has been broken by the death, at her home in Chelsea, S.W., of Miss Jane Sullivan, Sir Arthur's last surviving cousin, at the age of eighty.

"We called her the last of the Sullivans," said her nephew, Mr. John Priest. "She never really left behind her the memories of her first days with Sir Arthur.

"She joined the Savoy chorus because she wanted to sing under the direction of her cousin, and so that her relationship with him should be kept as secret as possible. she adopted the stage name of 'Jane Hervey.' It was as 'Jane Hervey' that she was known to all the famous Savoyards with whom she played."

Until a few years ago Miss Sullivan attended almost every principal performance of Gilbert and Sullivan opera in London. She regarded this as the greatest consolation life could give her after she had to give up singing.

Still Enjoys His Bicycle at 93

EASTBOURNE, England. — Rev. Frederick Hastings, at ninety-three, claims to be the world's oldest cyclist.

"I'm certain there's nothing to beat cycling as a means of getting about," he said. "I have been able to see all the wonders of the world on my bicycle."

He never cycles uphill and thinks that is one reason he can still kick a strong pedal.

News From Here and There Across Canada

Plan Artificial Lake to Relieve Drought Areas

Prairie Province Discusses Proposal of Farming "Great Lakes" in the Northwest Territory to Increase Humidity During Summer Months—Would Provide Cheap Transportation

WINNIPEG, Man. (CP).—Rushing streams of Canada's broad Northland may be put to work in the West Country's efforts to halt the ravages of drought, most fearful destroyer of Canadian grain crops. Gigantic plans advanced for the consideration of two Prairie Governments involve formation of a barren lands' lake double the size of the Great Lakes, and development of the West's greatest power project within 150 miles of Winnipeg.

Moisture would be added to the prairies' prevailing northwest wind by the proposed flooding of a monster basin in the Northwest Territories. In Manitoba's 400,000 horsepower project, advanced by Premier John Bracken, the province's lakes would be made the storehouse for moisture for the fertile Portage Plains in the South.

HARNESS RIVERS

Three of the great rivers pouring into the Arctic Ocean and Hudson Bay would be harnessed if the two projects were put into force. The Mackenzie River, the St. Lawrence of the North, and the Coppermine would be dammed to form the new lake in the barrens, and the flow of the wandering Saskatchewan would be diverted if the Manitoba plan were brought into effect.

"The more information we obtain, the better the Manitoba project looks," stated C. H. Attwood, Deputy Minister of Mines and Natural Resources, commenting on the plan advanced by Premier Bracken. At the last session of the Legislature $12,000 was set aside for investigation of the plan for storing the flood waters of the Saskatchewan in Manitoba's northern lakes.

Ot the present time the Saskatchewan flows into the north end of Lake Winnipeg at Grand Rapids, about seventy-five miles southeast of The Pas. Under the Bracken plan the river would be diverted south through Lakes Winnipegosis and Manitoba, which parallel Lake Winnipeg on the West, and a powerful head of water would be obtained on the Dauphin River, flowing from Lake Manitoba to Lake Winnipeg.

MOISTURE DIMINISHING

"It has been pointed out that the water table on the Portage Plains would be higher if the lake levels were higher," Mr. Attwood explained. "Sloughs drying out in the South draw on the water table, it is held, and as a result the sum total of available growing moisture is diminished. Besides, higher levels are sought by fishermen, duck hunters and muskrat trappers."

Though no estimate has been made of the possible cost of the Bracken project, since full information is not available as yet, it is contended that the work would not involve a large outlay. A dam would be constructed at Grand Rapids and possibly a canal to shorten the course of the Dauphin River where the power plant would be located, but few other works are at present considered necessary.

MOUNTED POLICE CORP PROPOSED

R.C.M.P. Will Concentrate Drive Against Narcotic Drug Traffic in Montreal

MONTREAL, Que. (CP)—Creation of a new "C" division of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Montreal, under the direct command of Superintendent T. Dann, heralds the opening of intensive warfare between the Federal police and the underworlds of Montreal, New York and Chicago which have sought to maintain Montreal as the centre of distribution for narcotics destined for the United States.

Montreal, as far back as 1927, was recognized by the narcotic division of the Federal Department of Health as the pivot point in Canada for narcotic smuggling, and in the report of that division for March, 1928, it was noted that "in the province of Quebec, which by reason of the facilities existing for importations from overseas through the ports of Quebec and Montreal, and the proximity of New York with its heavy illicit importations, is one of our most important centres." That centre was the metropolis, the report added, though it expressed the conviction, along with United States authorities, that "Montreal is no longer a centre for distribution of narcotics detined for the United States." This conclusion was arrived at following the breaking up in this city of a gang which had specialized in large international shipments of cocaine, morphine and heroin. Now, it is understood, New York and Chicago underworlds have found narcotics smuggling checked effectively at American seaports and Mexican border towns, with the result that large-scale peddlers and agents for international gangs are threatening to concentrate their activities in this city.

FIGURES ON SAWMILLING

Figures on the sawmilling industry for 1929, compiled by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics with the co-operation of the forest service, Department of the Interior, show a total of 3,161 sawmills in operation. Of these, the Province of Quebec, with 1,044 mills reporting, has almost one-third, but as regards size and capacity of mills, British Columbia leads with thirty-seven mills having a capacity of 20,000,000 feet and over, Ontario coming second, with ten such mills.

ESKIMO BOYS TRADE WIVES

Matrimony Is Crude Affair in Arctic—Women Are at a Premium

CAMROSE, Alta. (CP). — "If an Eskimo boy wants a wife he just grabs her—but, he usually has to make a present to her old man." That's the doctrine of Eskimo matrimonial laws given by R. L. Miller, who was the first white man to live for a Winter on Victoria Land, that bleak and treeless Arctic island north of the American Continent. The prices go up and down, but even when fur is good and the Eskimo have lots of money a rifle is a high price for them to pay for a wife. For that a boy can pick himself nearly any woman on the island—married or single.

"There aren't many single women for the boys to pick from. As soon as any girl is old enough she generally gets married, because they're short of women. But the boys often trade wives if they don't get along very well—which is as often as not. If a boy doesn't like the wife he's got he generally dickers to trade her. He could just kick her out if he felt like it, but good wives are hard to come by up there, and they don't kick any kind of a wife out until they've tried their best at trading.

"If the wife doesn't like the husband she's with, if he beats her too much or something, she just stops sewing for him. That generally brings the husband right around, because none of the Eskimo boys are experts at needlework. They wear out a lot of moccasins every Winter, and they hate to make new ones for themselves. So if a wife goes on strike, the husband generally looks around for a swap. Sometimes they have to throw in a few fish hooks or cartridges when they trade like that, but most Eskimos would a lot sooner hand out a few handfuls of hardware than to have to make their own boots."

Finds Pearl in Oyster Only to Lose It Again

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP).—Finding pearls in oysters is something like getting a royal flush. It happens once in a blue moon. So Commissioner Dayus can be excused if he got mildly excited on seeing a pearl staring at him from his plate a few days ago. This, however, is only half of it. It's a sad story. Mentally deciding that he would turn this pearl over to the Public Welfare Department, the Commissioner carefully fished it out of his fried oyster and placed it on the side of his plate. Then for a moment he forgot about it. Good-bye pearl. The maid came and cleared away the dishes, taking the pearl with them. It ended up in the garbage and could not be found again. Whether this pearl would have any value after being fried Commissioner Dayus can't say. He didn't have it long enough to find out.

RADIO BEAM NEEDED FOR AIR FLIGHTS

Scheduled Trips Over Rocky Mountains Impracticable Without Wireless

PILOTS FACE MANY PERILOUS HAZARDS

LETHBRIDGE, Alta. (CP).—Regular air mail flights across the Rocky Mountains, linking Lethbridge and Vancouver via the Crow's Nest Pass, must wait until two-way radio beams have been established along the route.

This was the opinion expressed by Captain Roy Brown, superintendent of the Western division Canadian Airways, Limited, after he had completed a strenuous flight from Vancouver to Lethbridge in a new Boeing mail ship. Bad flying conditions, experienced by many a flyer going through the Pass, were met by Captain Brown and his delays were due to atmospheric conditions.

TWO-WAY BEAM

"I learned a lot about the hazards of mountain flying as a result of my first flying through the great peaks," related the captain after he brought his ship to a safe landing. For one thing, he said, it would be impossible to maintain any kind of a schedule without the aid of two-way radio beams. These would have to be established all the way along the route, which extends around 500 miles. Just how many stations would be required he did not estimate.

Captain Brown left Vancouver alone. Everything went well until he was over Hope Mountain, where a strong head wind was encountered. Poor visibility developed and he was forced to head South, making an emergency landing in the State of Washington. He took off again and reached Grand Forks, B.C., before nightfall. After being grounded in Grand Forks for two days, he took off for Lethbridge with Mayor E. C. Henninger, of Grand Forks, as a passenger. Although forced to fly low, he piloted the plane from Grand Forks to Lethbridge in a little over three hours, landing on the air field here fifteen minutes before a snowstorm started.

Dog Protects Two-Year-Old Boy In Bush

MEDICINE HAT, Alta. (CP).—A small spaniel dog stood guard over its two-year-old master, Malcolm O'Connor, when the little boy became entangled in a clump of bushes on the outskirts of this city recently. Malcolm wandered from home and slipped down the side of a river bank. Only the clump of bushes saved him from plunging into the river.

A search party, hours later, located the boy, caught in the bushes a few feet from the river's edge, his little dog standing guard beside him. Malcolm suffered from cold and exposure, but otherwise was unharmed.

CALGARY CHOSEN FOR PRESS CONFERENCE

OTTAWA, Ont. (C.P.)—Every three years the active newspaper women of the Dominion, who form the Canadian Women's Press Club, hold a convention, and in 1932 the meeting will be held in Calgary. Dates for the conference have been set for June 28-30.

The entertainment committee hopes to arrange a motor trip into the country surrounding the prairie city, with the possibility of seeing the famous E. P. Ranch and the Turner Valley. A short stay at Banff may also be arranged. For the business part of the gathering addresses on craft topics will be given by prominent writers and workers from various parts of Canada. It is hoped also that an English writer will be among those on the programme.

Winter Sports in the Canadian Rockies

WITH a field of activity unequaled the world over the new Winter sports association, the Ski Runners of the Canadian Rockies, is rapidly coming into prominence among skiers and Winter sports enthusiasts generally. The new organization is patterned largely after the famous Trail Riders and its locale, unequaled for scenery and facilities on this continent and probably without a rival even in Europe, is Banff, in the heart of the Rockies, with runs and trails varying from one to ten days in duration and covering such world-known objectives as Mount Assiniboine, Simpson Pass, Shadow Lake, Lake Louise, Ptarmigan Valley and Pass, Bow Lakes and Pipestone Pass. Skiing over some of these passes is in full swing as late as June when visitors are enjoying golf and tennis, fishing and hiking, in the valleys below. But the sport begins in November each year.

A thousand feet above Banff and about an hour out from the town is the ski lodge built on the pass between Mounts Norquay and Stoney Squaw. From the clubhouse runs radiate in all directions with cabins and shelters at strategic points for rest and refreshment. There is a fifty-metre jump at Buffalo Park and every year in February (this year February 7-14) a tournament is held where the pick of Canadian and outside jumpers compete.

Layout shows (1) Ski track across virgin snow with Mt. Assiniboine, 11,800 feet high, in background; (2) Canadian Pacific Bungalow Camp at Magog headquarters for skiing at Mt. Assiniboine; (3) Mount Norquay Ski Lodge, 1,000 feet above Banff, overlooking the Bow River, with dog team in foreground and (4) The Towers, on Wonder Pass, near Mt. Assiniboine, one of the finest Winter scenes in the Rockies.

Postoffice of Old Stage Coach Days Monument to Past

Historical Building of Upper Canada Period Now Being Used as Second-Hand Store in Kingston —Was Opened in 1789

By G. H. WILLIAMSON
(Written Especially for the Canadian Press)

KINGSTON, Ont. (CP).—There still stands on Princess Street, Kingston, the old stone building that was used about the year 1800 as a postoffice. It is below King Street, and on the King's Highway No. 2, and now the quarters of a secondhand store. Immediately opposite is the old Commercial Bank building, which was the first home of Queen's Medical College, then the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Upper Canada. It was in this portion of Kingston, close to the old French fort, Frontenac, that British and French fought their last battle for possession of that fortress established in the year 1673 by Count Frontenac and Chevalier de la Salle.

TABLET NEEDED

Strange to say, Kingston has no tablet on its early-day postoffice, which might draw the attention of the tourist traveling from Toronto or Montreal to the old capital of Upper Canada (1792) and of the United Province of Canada (1841-1844).

It was in the year 1789 that a postoffice was opened in Kingston, and in the same year small offices also were opened in York (now Toronto), Niagara and Elizabethtown (now Brockville). Except for a single annual trip from Montreal to Niagara there was no postal service west of Kingston. At that time a courier set out from Montreal in January, traveling either on foot or on snowshoes. If he made eighteen miles a day he was considered lucky. In subsequent years the mail service began to grow in volume and it was as early as 1792 that the postal service was extended to include the United States. In that year a conference between the two countries put the service within the reach of the people of both Canada and the States.

NINE-DAY JOURNEY

Twenty-one years after the opening of the Kingston office, or in 1810, a fortnightly service was inaugurated between Montreal and Kingston, this being acclaimed as an outstanding achievement. Five years later this fortnightly service was made weekly, with the opening of a coach line between the two centres. At that stage of the development of the postal service patience was a virtue. It took nine days for a letter to come from New York to Kingston, a distance of 400 miles, and sometimes eleven days would pass before the mail courier arrived.

The postage on a single sheet of paper weighing less than an ounce, posted in London, England, and sent to Halifax by packet, and thence to its destination in Canada, was: To Quebec, ninety-two cents; to Montreal, ninety-eight cents; to Kingston, $1.04, and to York (Toronto), $1.12. An additional sheet of paper in the letter raised the price of the mail proportionately.

There were two places on the road from Montreal to York where highwaymen commonly operated. One was at Grass' Creek, a few miles east of Kingston, where the United Empire Loyalists landed. It was here that Bill Johnston robbed the mail courier of a large amount of money in 1838 and got away across the St. Lawrence in a small boat to New York State. Another common place for mail and other robberies was a piece of road five miles west of Kingston.

IMAGINE THEIR EMBARRASSMENT

Startled Sleeper Applauds Sermon, Then Realizes He Is Not in Theatre

MONTREAL, Que. (CP).—Genevieve Lipsett Skinner, writing in The Montreal Daily Star describes the only known case of applause in church in local annals.

Rev. Father Hogan, of Ste. Anne's, preaching in the Church of the Ascension of Our Lord in Westmount one morning recently, the writer says, ended his sermon with a dramatic peroration. As his voice died away a vigorous round of applause came from a man occupying a pew in the rear of the church. The congregation was startled first, then amused at the unusual occurence.

Later in the morning, the man who applauded explained to the parish priest that he had fallen asleep during the sermon and had begun to waken during the peroration of the preacher. In the first glimmer of returning consciousness, he thought he was in a theatre and, impressed by the concluding remarks of the preacher, he felt his approbation could only be expressed by applause. When he realized that his was the only hand-clapping indulged in, he became fully awake. There he was in the Church of the Ascension, and extremely embarrassed.

Not that the man in this case was the first who ever dozed during a good sermon. The incident reminded some of the old-timers of an incident attributed to Rev. Father McShane which was alleged to have occurred during the depression that followed the war. Father McShane is said to have announced that during the hard times then prevailing, the homeless would find St. Patrick's Church always open, and they could sleep there if they wished to do so. "Sundays excepted, of course," the priest added, "for on that day the pews are reserved for our regular sleepers."

HUGE SWAMP IS RECLAIMED

More Than 7,000 Acres of Marsh Land Fertile Farm Area

TORONTO (CP).—A wilderness of marsh may be turned into a veritable garden as a result of a project for reclamation of land recently completed in Ontario. Converting 7,500 acres of marshy ground into workable soil, the scheme already gives promise of yielding bountiful harvests.

The reclaimed area, situated in the townships of Gwillimbury West and King, about thirty miles north of Toronto, is known as the Holland Marsh. It drains into the south end of Lake Simcoe. A river valley for a distance of five miles and varying in width from two to three miles comprised the drained land.

Commenced in 1925 by the municipality of Gwillimbury West on petition of land owners in the district, the project was only completed in 1930. Some 200 acres have already been developed, however. The land has been devoted to market gardening. W. H. Day, former professor at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, who owns thirty-seven acres, reports he secured a yield of approximately $700 an acre in the first year of cultivation. Lettuce and celery proved especially profitable. Part of the developed area is being worked by a group of Dutch farmers and residents of the nearby village of Bradford own small plots.

Rich Gold Strike Is Made At Winnipeg's Back Door

Veteran of Klondike and Yukon Announces Find of Deposits Which Assay at High Price Per Ton—Chrome Ore Also Found

WINNIPEG (CP).—While trail-weary prospectors push themselves unmercifully on in search of that soul-firing element, "gold," in Manitoba's mining country, Tom Brooks has discovered his "Eldorado" at Winnipeg's back door.

Eighty-three-year-old veteran of the Cobalt, Klondike and Yukon rushes, and the first man to assay gold in The Pas, "Curly," as he is known to the mining fraternity, is in Winnipeg and has divulged news of his strike. From War Eagle Lake, sixty miles east of Winnipeg, and only three miles from the Canadian Pacific Railway line in the Whitemouth district, he brought samples of rock which show a large deposit of rich gold ore and other minerals.

FINDS CHROME ORE

From this muskeg, rock and evergreen country, "Curly," in his self-constructed laboratory, with the use of his scientific knowledge of chemicals, has also extracted chrome ore, fertilizer and blue dye.

So far, from calcined (roasted) rock he has produced fifty tons of fertilizer, which is readily marketed here. By the erection of a small plant, Mr. Brooks maintains an output of twenty tons daily could be assured and placed on the Winnipeg market for $60 per ton. This would compete with an imported fertilizer of the same type being sold here for $600 per ton. "Blue" tons of it, he claims, can be derived from the muskeg moss of calcined ore after chemical treatment.

FAVORABLE ASSAY

Samples of this product have obtained a very favorable assay in Montreal. The chrome ore, used in the manufacture of steel and one of the most valuable minerals of today, is his latest development. It has been obtained by a leaching process, although to what commercial extent has not yet been ascertained. Throughout all samples show traces of tin ore.

Mr. Brooks, builder of the first mill in the Cobalt at Larder Lake twenty years ago and prophet of the Cobalt boom when experts scoffed at the idea, has been a prominent figure in many Canadian mining ventures.

Battleground of Former Days Now Peaceful City

Mayor of Louisburg Apologizes for Necessity to Hold Three Police Courts During Past Year—Only Four Arrests Made

LOUISBURG, N.S. (CP).—Once a battleground for which two Powers strove as symbol of empire in North America, Louisburg today stands for peace among the towns of this province-by-the-sea.

So it was in troubled voice Mayor M. S. Huntington admitted that Chief of Police Neil H. Murphy had found it necessary to make four arrests in 1931, that Magistrate B. M. Spencer had held three sessions of police court and had sent two men to jail during the year.

JAIL DOOR AJAR

For the three years prior to 1931 the doors of the jail had stood ajar; no arrests had been made for drunkenness or crime of any kind. Not in ten years had a citizen of Louisburg served a sentence in the county jail or appeared in either the County or Supreme Courts on a criminal charge. During 1930 it had not been necessary to call one session of the police court.

Mayor Huntington hastened to add: "The two persons jailed this year were both nonresidents. I attribute the absence of crime in our town to the general good character of its citizens. It may be interesting to note that we did not have an automobile accident in Louisburg during 1931. Despite a marked increase in motor traffic we never had a fatal automobile accident within the town limits or one that resulted in serious injury to any person."

BUSY COMMUNITY

But Louisburg, with a population of 1,200, is not a lifeless community. It is an important port and serves Cape Breton well when other harbors are sealed with ice. It is a haven for hundreds of fishing craft. It is a mecca for tourists who visit the ruins of the historic forts.

Under the auspices of the Canadian Battlefields Commission, the sturdy foundations of Louisburg, upon which Louis XIV expended more than $120,000,000 to make it a great French stronghold, are being reclaimed from the grassy grounds that have hidden them for the last century. Soon the "Dunkirk of America" will regain its majestic appearance of old, and it is expected to be one of the show places of the continent.

Nova Scotia Comes Through 1931 With Her Colors Flying

Bluenose Province Maintains Credit, Records Fewer Business Failures, and Finishes Year in Excellent Financial Condition, Declares Acting Premier

HALIFAX, N.S. (CP).—Nova Scotia finished 1931 in relatively better position than most countries, maintained her credit at a high standard and recorded fewer business failures than in 1929, a year of general prosperity, according to a New Year's message issued by Hon. Percy C. Black, Acting Premier of the Province during the absence of Premier Gordon S. Harrington.

FEW BUSINESS FAILURES

"One year ago the Premier of Nova Scotia in his New Year's message expressed the view that this province would successfully meet the problems created by world-wide economic disturbances. These conditions have continued longer and have been more aggravated than was expected, but I am able to say that Nova Scotia has come through this period in a relatively better position than most other countries. There is satisfaction in the knowledge that fewer business failures occurred in the province this year than in 1929, which was looked upon as a period of prosperity. We also take satisfaction in the fact that the credit of the province has been maintained on a high basis in the financial markets of the world.

BOUNTIFUL HARVEST

"During the past season the farms of Nova Scotia produced a bountiful harvest and progress has been made in dairying. Production of our coal and steel industries reflected the smaller scale of manufacturing and traffic throughout Canada. Official estimates show that, notwithstanding depressed market conditions, the quantity of fish landed on our shores during 1931 was not greatly below the average production. Notwithstanding the particularly difficult conditions confronting the lumber industry this year, 159,558 cords of pulpwood were manufactured in Nova Scotia and 169,976 cords exported. In 1930, 170,921 cords were manufactured in the province. At the present time a number of lumber operators are contemplating operations during the present Winter in the hope that lumber markets will gradually improve. In view of the importance to industry of low-priced power, it is noteworthy that the electrical energy supplied by the Nova Scotia Power Commission is steadily increasing in volume.

CREATE WORK

"The prompt measures taken by the Federal, provincial and municipal authorities to relieve unemployment throughout Nova Scotia has materially assisted in meeting the situation. The funds thus made available were expended mainly on our highways and in municipal works. Up to December 20 912,120 man days work were provided through unemployment relief in the province. However, I would emphasise again that governmental authority can only go so far in providing employment and in the final analysis the responsibility must rest upon individuals and companies who are in a position to create work.

"Conditions throughout Nova Scotia are such that this province will quickly respond to any general improvement in business. The outlook for the coming year, while presenting many problems which must be solved, has encouraging features.

"The courage and determination with which this province has dealt with difficult situations in the past will, I am satisfied, enable us to solve the problems that must be faced during 1932."

PRIZE GRAIN IS SELECTED FOR EXHIBIT

Canadian Wheat Growers Prepare to Meet Competition in 1933

WORLD EXPOSITION ATTRACTS MANY

REGINA, Sask. (CP).—Kings and crown princes of Canada's wheatlands today are preparing for a busy Winter of plain and fancy seed-selecting such as the rosiest days of Prairie agrarian history never saw. Big shot growers whose prize-winning fame has spread afar, and just plain farmers with more than a little ambition, alike are getting ready to stand in defence of the Dominion's supremacy in quality wheat.

CHOOSING SEEDS

It will be the Summer of 1933 before carefully-chosen exhibits of wheat grown in Canada are placed in competition with prize samples from more than a score of countries at the world's grain exhibition and conference here, but the Trelles, the Larcombes and the Gilberts of the West's wheat belt already are looking over their choicest certified seed to be used in the all-important crop of 1932.

POWERFUL SCEPTRE

Here, in July and August, 1933, Canada will pit her finest hard wheats against the best wheats from many European countries, Argentina, Australia and New Zealand, as well as the United States. The wheat king whose crowning features what is to be the greatest grain show ever held, will weild a sceptre no man has waved before.

Triumphs year after year at the Chicago International Livestock Exposition's Grain Show have led Canadians to believe the prize wheat grown on the prairies is the world's best. If it is, a Canadian will win the Regina award less then two years hence.

ARREST IS REFUSED WELSH EX-SOLDIER

MONTREAL, Que. (CP).—Arrest is not something to be avoided. It is a privilege not easily attained—especially when a free passage to England for the Christmas holidays is suspected. That was the experience of John Wells, self-confessed fugitive from the justice of Glamorganshire, South Wales, who walked into police headquarters here recently. He claimed there was a warrant outstanding against him for the non-support of his wife.

The Montreal police, having no warrant for him, referred him to the immigration authorities. To them he explained he had entered the country illegally some eighteen months ago. Immigration officials refused to believe this libel on their vigilance. Back to police headquarters went Wells. Unable to do anything else for him, police offered to get him some food and suggested the Meurling Refuge as a place to spend the night.

U.S. LEGATION BEING BUILT

Diplomatic Headquarters to Be Four Stories High and Cost $300,000

OTTAWA (CP).—Behind a bright blue fence which faces the Dominion's Parliament Buildings, the work of putting up the new United States Legation goes on apace. The puffing steam shovel has done its work. Now the foundation is going in.

Ground was broken for the building on November 23. It will be finished next August. This is subject to delays due to bad weather. Four stories in height, the building will cost $300,000.

From his new windows, the United States minister will look across a sweep of green lawn to the main Parliament Building, where Senators and commoners gather during the session. The situation of the new building is regarded as one of the best obtainable for diplomatic headquarters.

Absent-Minded Motorist Finds Parking Costly

MAGRATH, Alta. (CP).—Absent-mindedness costs money, according to a certain resident of this town, who feels slightly put out over the action of a certain garage owner in Lethbridge.

The Magrath man went to Lethbridge in his automobile on a business trip. He placed his car in a garage. His business completed, he sought the car, but had forgotten where he had parked it. Police were notified, but a city-wide search failed to reveal the car's whereabouts. When a bill for storage arrived two weeks later, however, he suddenly remembered where his car was.

What's New and Interesting in Woman's Dress

Seeing London

By JOAN LITTLEFIELD
(Copyright, 1932, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

THE private view of the great exhibition of French art at Burlington House has inaugurated what is likely to be an unusually important social season. So many people who are usually in the South of France or at the Swiss Winter sports are remaining at home this Winter that London is full of celebrities, and has, in addition, become the Mecca of Paris.

French people, in spite of a rooted dislike of crossing the Channel in Winter, are taking advantage of the favorable rate of exchange and of this wonderful display of their art to visit London in large numbers. Many of France's artists and connoisseurs are here, and, together with famous English painters, they are being entertained at countless private dinner parties and some official receptions held in connection with the exhibition.

The private view proved to be an artistic rather than a social event. Although the famous galleries were crowded with celebrities, including many French people, art, for once, proved superior to clothes. All the women seemed to have elected to wear either dark fur coats or black cloth ones, and their small and unobstrusive hats were not designed to draw attention away from the riot of lovely color on the walls. The usual idle chatter was also absent, and one heard instead earnest murmurs of "pigmentation," "form" and "color values," while the seats in the centre of the rooms, usually full of people who come merely to watch the "parade," were deserted.

Those two veterans of the stage, Sir Arthur Pinero and Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, without whom no private view is complete, were deeply interested in the pictures of the nineties, and Lady Oxford, accompanied by Prince and Princess Antoine Bibesco and Lady Violet Bonham-Carter, "did" the galleries with her usual thoroughness. George Moore, as was to be expected, made straight for the Manets. The great novelist has a number of this master's paintings in his house in Ebury Street, including one of the artist's wife which he bought for quite a small sum.

Everyone remarked on the new methods of lighting, by means of huge reflectors, which have been introduced properly to illuminate the pictures and to eliminate shadows from the galleries. These enable one to see the color and detail of the pictures with exceptional clarity. Also the individual spectator is spared unnecessary eye strain, and human traffic through the galleries is speeded up because no time and energy have to be wasted in dodging about "to get the best light on the picture."

The influence of the exhibition on dress and decoration has yet to be felt, but mothers of this year's debutantes, who are anxious to find a helpful course of studies for their daughters, welcome the fact that there are "conferences promenades," beginning at the early hour of 9:30 a.m., similar to those arranged in Paris at the museums and art galleries for the young girls at finishing schools.

Princess Royal Geneology

ALTHOUGH the official use of the title Princess Royal, which is to be borne in future by Princess Mary, dates from Hanoverian times, the heir apparent of the crown of Scotland before the union with England was styled Princess Royal of Scotland, and the title of Princess Royal for the sovereign's first-born daughter seems first to have been used under the Stuarts in England.

The first definite mention of the title Princess Royal in a state document is found in a royal warrant of 1727, when George II conferred armorial bearings on "our eldest daughter, the Princess Royal Anne," who afterwards became Princess of Orange.

By her death in 1759 the title became vacant and was not renewed until 1789, when King George III conferred it on his eldest daughter, the Princess Royal Charlotte Augusta Matilda, then nearly twenty-three. On her death in 1828 the title remained vacant until after the accession of Queen Victoria, who bestowed it on the future Empress Frederick when the latter was but two months old.

Companion of Honor

COL. John Buchan, M.P., who has just been made a Companion of Honor, has had a varied and interesting career. He is well known, of course, as an historical novelist, and he has been a member of Parliament since 1927. He leapt into fame at St. Stephen's within a few days of his debut there. So brilliant was his first contribution to parliamentary oratory that it was likened to the historic maiden speech of the late Earl of Birkenhead.

Mr. Buchan, who is fifty-five, clean-shaven, and of a military bearing, won the Stanhope Historican Essay and Newdigate prizes at Oxford and was president of the Union. He was subsequently called to the bar, and afterwards became private secretary to the High Commissioner for South Africa. During the early part of the war he was on headquarters staff of the British army in France, and from 1917 to 1918 was Minister of Information under the Prime Minister. His favorite recreations are deer-stalking, fishing and mountaineering.

London Gold Rush

A GOLD rush has started in London. Thousands of pounds worth of trinkets—old brooches, bangles, rings, cigarette cases, pendants and necklets—are being melted down in the furnace rooms of Hatton Garden. The reason is partly the need for economy and partly the fact that old gold is being turned into new at 119 shillings an ounce—almost the highest price ever paid for refined gold in this country.

All day a procession of people—some of them nervous-looking little old ladies in quaint clothes—are seen hurrying along with attache cases to the bullion rooms of Hatton Garden. Even the jewelers and the bookbinders are sharing in the gold rush. The sweepings of their floors are coming in on the noonday tide in a way that has made Hatton Garden open its experienced eyes in wonderment.

SMART STREET CLOTHES FROM PARIS

SIMPLICITY IN STREET CLOTHES

Goupy's Black Fur-Topped Coat Has Cap Sleeves of Fur, and Long, Pointed Undersleeves of Cloth. London Trades' Yellow and Grey Tweed Ensemble Consists of a Caracul-Lined Topcoat, Tweed Skirt, Grey Tricot Cardigan and a Heather-Knit, Long-Sleeved Blouse. (A More Detailed Picture of the Coat Is Sketched at the Extreme Right.) Lelong Uses Soft Clinging Jersey for a Brown Three-Piece Suit and Trims the Jacket With Applications of Zig-Zag Wool. Chanel Disguises the Trouser Skirt of This Grey Beige Suit With Buttoned-On Panels.

PARIS couturiers have a great deal to say about the matter of subtle good taste in street apparel, and today we are showing you a group of their more exclusive creations.

Goupy has done a warm Winter coat in black wool with a heavy diagonal rib featuring a caracul top. This model, at the upper left, emphasizes the shoulder width by having little cap sleeves of fur attached to the fur top. The undersleeve is very long, and ends in a deep point. The fur belt displays a large metal buckle.

The yellow and grey tweed ensemble is from London Trades. The cloth is one of those wonderfully soft tweeds that the English are so famous for. The skirt is straight and slim; a long-sleeved yellow and grey heather wool blouse goes under the grey tricot cardigan. And over it all is a tweed coat lined throughout with flat grey caracul. At the extreme right we have sketched the same coat, worn closed, so that you may see all the details.

Lelong uses soft, warm jersey in a toned-down coffee brown for the jacket suit that comes next. The woolen blouse is striped in green and orange, and the jacket is adorned with zig-zag applications of knit wool.

Chanel has a reputation for startling notes, and this is one of them from her newest collections. It is a trouser skirt disguised by buttoned-on panels in the front and back. The front buttons up diagonally, and the edges lap over to make a double collar.

IRENE DANA PRESENTS

One of Irene Dana's most successful numbers is this smart grey tweed coat and the red and grey ensemble worn under it. The coat has hip pockets and a deep revered collar of grey caracul, with wide cloth cuffs and a cloth belt. The jacket of red wool has a skirt of grey tweed. Please notice the cute little muff that goes with this suit. It is made of supple shaved lamb; each end is a ruffle resembling gauntlet cuffs when you tuck your hands in. But the most surprising thing about the muff is the fact that it is also a bag. A zipper fastening discloses the inner recesses. A flat little hat of shaved lamb and a wooly scarf knitted in open meshes completes the outfit. Incidentally, two of the newest chapeaux are sketched at the right, and are fully described in the caption below.

WHAT'S NEW IN HATS

The Smart Hard Felt Crown of the Very Tiny Hat Is Draped and Twisted With Vivid Green Velvet Ribbon. The Other Model Is the Squashed Telescope Hat That Agnes Has Launched Because She Wears It so Well Herself. It Is of Royal Blue Trimmed With a Swirl of Pale Blue Feathers.

Fashion Notes

FANCY waistcoats for women are the newest fashion in sports wear. They have already made their appearance at the Spring dress shows, and it is predicted that they will become serious rivals to the blouse and jumper.

One type is the "sporty boy" canary yellow model, with bone buttons chosen to match a royal blue cardigan suit. Another is the old-fashioned corduroy of Farmer Giles, cut like a dress waistcoat with narrow revers and a regency shaping. Plain scarves, knotted like a stock or caught by a gold safety pin in the centre, are worn with these waistcoats.

Many of the new tailored suits have metal trimmings. Gilt curtain rings appear as fasteners to belts and tabs, while flat chromium-plated buttons are used in rows down the centre, back and sleeves of many coat-frocks and jumpers.

Informal Entertainment

ENTERTAINING in the West End, especially among the younger set, is getting more and more informal. The favorite idea at present is to give a cinema party, with an invitation running something like this: "Mr. and Mrs.—— are giving a cinema party on ——. Eggs and bacon on tap at their house ad lib., followed by a visit to ——. Bring your friends."

The meal is usually a continuous one with cocktails, beer and coffee to drink, and when some dozen or so guests have arrived a cinema is selected and the party moves off. Afterwards someone else's house is visited for sandwiches or kippers. It is all very cheap and very cheery.

The Theatre

THE most important first night of the new year is likely to be Mr. Cochran's production of Offenbach's "La Belle Helene," rechristened simply "Helen," which comes to the Adelphi at the end of this month after a preliminary run at Manchester. A. P. Herbert has adapted and rewritten the book, Oliver Messel has designed the scenery and dresses, and the great Max Reinhardt came over from Berlin to supervise the rehearsals. Great things are expected of the piece, which has Evelyn Laye as its leading lady and George Robey and W. H Berry also in the cast.

Mr. Cochran's next venture, also in association with Herr Reinhardt, is to be a revival of "The Miracle," with Lady Diana Cooper as the Madonna. This will be presented at the Lyceum when the pantomime season is over.

Meanwhile "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" has at last finished its long run at the Queen's, and Sir Barry Jackson has followed it with a four weeks' revival of Eden Phillpotts' "The Farmer's Wife," with Cedric Hardwicke in the part of Churdles Ash. This will be succeeded by a revival of "The Immortal Hour," with another principal of "The Barretts," Gwen Frangcon-Davies, as Etain.
